Without an equal for vivid reality and brutal strength
—Daily Review

RICH RED BLOOD

Life in the raw, tough, brutal and done into an amazingly convincing new picture, Fox's melodrama "The Sea Wolf" will give strong entertainment to our wellknown masses. Milton Sills as Wolf Larsen is even tougher than Jack London painted him and he gives the greatest performance of his career. As a story of the sea this picture is without an equal for vivid reality and brutal strength.

Mighty! — Film Daily

"The Sea Wolf"

"Mighty" is the word that best describes Fox's talker version of the famous Jack London story, viewed yesterday at a special showing. Milton Sills, in a powerful performance that will stand out as one of the year's best, dominates every foot of the film. Those who like their action as rough as it is humanly possible to make it, will revel in his robust exhibition as the terrifying master of a sail-ship in Far Eastern waters. The romantically-minded also will find plenty to enjoy in the love affair between Raymond Hackett and Jane Keith, outcasts who meet in an Oriental den and find eventual happiness despite the "Wolf's" designs to crush the lad and take the girl for himself. Alfred Santell directed. Any exhib can put a check alongside of this one.

THE SEA WOLF

Most powerful sea story ever written comes to life with realism that makes you gasp. Brawny men who hate, love and fight with primal passion. A woman who was wayward but won and redeemed by love. Shut out from heaven, chained to hell on the wet decks of a sailing ship with a skipper who was a demon of strength and cruelty, whose will was the law. Wonderful characterizations, dynamic climaxes, terrific drama make this an immediate and electrical hit.

STARTS AT R

Broadway, supposedly immune to anything new, is due for a new thrill—that of a serial taking first-run privileges and at no less a house than the Roxy.

Universal wins the distinction of having the first serial booked for a Broadway first-run in the history of pictures.

"The Indians Are Coming" is the title of this all-talking chapter play, starring Col. Tim McCoy. The first chapter will be shown at the Roxy beginning this Saturday. This booking is in line with the latest trend among big theatres throughout the country, which, Universal reports, are signing up for "The Indians Are Coming."

This development is regarded as most significant. In an era when production to a large extent has swung to talking pictures with distinct adult appeal, the big houses are recognizing that the younger generation must not be lost sight of.

The Roxy booking of "The Indians Are Coming" is considered the highest type of box office confirmation for Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s emphasis on the youth angle.

"The Indians Are Coming" was directed by Henry McRae. It is based on Buffalo Bill's story, "The Great West That Was", authentic record of Buffalo Bill's career.

Distributors Grab Box-Office Receipts Of N. Y. Showmen Violating Contracts

The Millennium

London—A leading West End theatre is understood to have received an emphatic "no" from Maurice Chevalier when the latter was recently offered $7,500 per week for personal appearances.

Chevalier, now making appearances at key city spots in the United States, receives $5,000 top per week—some weeks.

Prominent Exhibitors Among Defendants in Film Board Action

Confiscation of box-office receipts in at least six instances within the last two weeks has been resorted to by New York distributors to levy on judgments obtained against contract violators.

This method has been employed only as a last resort, but it is in line with New York exchangemen's insistence that contracts must be lived up to in their trade zone. Some of the box-offices tied up by marshals have been at theatres of some of the more prominent greater New York showmen, MOTION PICTURE NEWS learns.

Several hundred suits have been brought against exhibitors in the New York territory for alleged violation of contract. In about 99 per cent of the cases the exhibitors have settled promptly, states Louis B. Nizer, secretary of the New York Film Board and organizer of the clearance bureau, which handles contract complaints for distributors.

The clearance idea was put into effect by Nizer as an aftermath of the Thacher decree outlawing compulsory arbitration in the industry. It has proved effective in curbing contract violations in the New York zone.

Other Film Boards are understood to be studying the Nizer innovation with a view to adopting similar plans in their zones.

A Big Nightie Night

Chicago—Press notice from the Fox Chicago theatres:

"The Sheridan Theater is holding its second annual pyjama girl contest. In addition to the contest, singers, dancers and entertainers will be on the program. Everybody is invited to come, and pyjamas are not required."

But, just the same, we'll bet no self-respecting pyjama girl shows up in a dowdy old night dress.

Coast Alimony Bill Resembles National Debt

Hollywood—This famous Gold Coast resort has long boasted of many species of collectors—art, income tax, antique, etc. And, always anxious to stay far in the lead in so far as innovations are concerned, it is rapidly developing a new collection complex, thanks to "unreasonable" wives who simply will insist upon a little matter of alimony.

Film folk are known to do things in a big way. It is only natural, therefore, to expect the aftermath of broken romances to shape up in the same manner, as evidenced by the millions which have so generously been handed out in recent years for the mending of blighted hearts.

"Jam" Not Cause of Leaving U. A. Says Riesenfeld

His desire to return to New York, which he believes the best spot for his line of work, led him to resign as head of the United Artists studio music department, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld told MOTION PICTURE NEWS. He has been succeeded on the Coast by Alfred Newman. The latter, who is 29, will supervise all music on forthcoming U. A. pictures. There was no hint of friction at the Coast plant, Reisenfeld said. He resigned prior to the resignation of John W. Considine, Jr.

John McCormick Deal With Paramount Off

Hollywood—Negotiations are understood to have been dropped in the deal which was to have brought John McCormick into the Paramount fold. The veteran producer still is unaffiliated, with no plans as yet for his future activities.

Chiseling

A new racket being worked plenty in the picture business by a very limited group of highly important personalities hinges around the purchase of property for new exchange structures.

When decision is made to erect buildings in exchange centers, the "mob" rushes through an order for the property, buying at ridiculously low prices and selling to exchange interests at exorbitant sums.

Sometimes they even pull down graft on actual construction of the building, getting a split from contractors who are forced to use inferior materials in order to keep under the bid line.

An old racket in city politics, but new to the picture business.

L. A. Runt Links See Patrons Go Back to Theatres

Hollywood—Plenty of sugar is going to be lost in the miniature golf courses of Los Angeles and environs, it is indicated by the manner in which the links are beginning to fold.

With bigger and better courses the rage and the mushroom speed with which the links have multiplied, the inexperienced who rushed in to the new get-rich-quick projects are finding that it takes showmanship to crash public tastes now, for the movement back to the theatre is on.

A sign on an 18-hole course offers "18 holes for 18 cents" or one cent a round. This is viewed as the beginning of the end, for the minnies hardly can stand the gaff of one cent a throw.

Eastward Ho! Tin Panner's Option Craps Collateral

Chicago—All railway terminals here have been clogged for weeks with eastbound traffic which originated in Hollywood. Daily caravans of amazing proportions arrive from the West and depart for the East. Their passage has been likened by careful observers to the refugee hordes that streamed out of Paris when the city was threatened by the Marne offensive of 1916. It is as chaotic, bewildered and numerous a crowd, these observers say, but not as well dressed or well fed a one.

A PINCH OF FLESH TO SEASON FLOPS

THE guns along a national front are barking again. Another revolution is wrapping its troublesome arms around the picture business.

For three months or more, on this very page and splattered throughout its columns, this publication has been stressing the return of flesh and blood shows in the de luxe theatres of America.

Today, the theatre division of RKO is bowling along like a ship with full sail set, while a couple of envious competitors are still trying to find the way out of the mist. So good has the vaudeville business become this year that the Radio group has shot its national circuit up to eighty-four weeks and the end is not in sight.

The Melange Goes Flat

PUBLIX is bringing back presentation units on the double quick, recognizing the pronounced public swing in the something more-than-the-picture movement which is blanketing the country. The Loew circuit, on the other hand, has turned a number of its vaudeville houses in Greater New York into straight picture theatres and the results are spotty.

This is no argument for vaudeville or stage shows. Neither is it a criticism of the big circuits for adding amusement by-products to the entertainment melange. But it is indicative of a situation of which this business must take cognizance if the balance in balance sheets is to maintain its proper keel.

The Truth, and It's Awful

THERE is one conclusion and one speculation to be drawn from this current development. The conclusion is that theatre operators have discovered the awful truth about present-day product. Good attractions—the kind that go down on the record in black ink—reach the exhibitor at intervals too infrequent to sustain the public's interest.

The consequence is that the big chain heads, whose job it is to make money with the theatres they control, find themselves digging into the showman's bag of tricks to see what they can bring to the rescue of doddering box-offices. A sad and bitter indictment of production and producers.

THE speculation, equally foreboding but more menacing in its potential effect on the business, is whether or not sound has run its course. Many millions have been thrown into the talker stew. Sound, in the first flush of its success as a novelty, unquestionably resuscitated asthmatic theatre grosses. Expansive smiles, therefore, returned to their accustomed places on expansive faces and everything seemed right in the world.

But there are those who are sitting back and wondering about the future and, in their speculation, conjecturing if the public isn't being talked to death by talkers.

Barraged by Wordy Guns

UNQUESTIONABLY theatregoers are being dialogue-d to the point of distraction. But that isn't due to sound, but to producers who are trying to learn how to make the unruly newcomer behave.

The hunt for the proper formula is still on. Until somebody deduces first what the proper ingredients are and then how to mix them adroitly, bad pictures will continue to emanate from Hollywood. And, as is obvious, as long as product continues on its current mediocre plane, the business will suffer.

Is This the Way Out?

ALL of the advantages made possible by sound—music, dialogue, effects—will have to be judiciously and more coherently tied in with the tried and proved factors in silent picture making. Talkers don't have to talk every foot of their way merely to demonstrate that they are living up to their monicker.

Output will have to be trimmed in order to permit concentration of brains and ingenuity, not to overlook money, on selective picture making.

The present system of one-man production will have to be scrapped. The door, now closed to independent effort, will have to be dynamited wide open.

It's coming. Nothing can stem the common-sense tide which is rapidly creeping up on this industry.

Independent Producers See Time Ripe To Re-enter Field After 2-Year Lapse

Hollywood—William Fox is reported as having flown to Del Monte to confer with various executives on the possibility of buying out either Universal or Columbia. Studio executives at both plants deny any such plan and Carl Laemmle has gone to New York.

Marco Reported To Succeed Roxy; F. & M. Shows in?

Marco of Fanchon & Marco will succeed S. L. Rothafel as managing director of the Roxy, New York, it is understood. Roxy is leaving for Europe for an extended vacation at the end of this month and report has it that when he returns he will take up his duties with RCA and National Broadcasting Co. Roxy is to be in charge of the large picture theatre to be housed in the proposed Radio City, and until it is opened in 1932 will devote his time to broadcast work, it is reported.

Marco

Marco is arriving in New York late this week and if the deal is set, Fanchon & Marco shows will go into the Roxy, which probably will serve as a production center for the presentation company. It is his reported plan to bring Walt Roesner to the Roxy as master of ceremonies, as well as to introduce to Broadway Roesner's concerts, which consist of popular arrangements of the classics.

Harry C. Arthur, general manager of Fox Theatres, told Motion Picture News Thursday that the Marco assignment at the Roxy is but a temporary one, during which time the West Coast producer will work under Oscar Oldknow, executive vice-president of the circuit. He added that Roxy will resume work at the theatre upon his return from Europe, and that, so far as he knew, would continue at the house for a period of years.

Viennese Exhibitors Get the Warpath "Bug"

Vienna—Alarmed over the growing decrease of silents, unwired theatre owners have banded together to fight for continuance of that type of product. The exhibitors formed their own distributing organization to scout up silents.

Negotiating Loans and Laying Plans on Big Basis "News" Survey Shows

Hollywood—Independent producers, recognizing a big chance for a comeback during the new season, are preparing to resume production on an extensive scale after a two-year layoff.

A number of them, Motion Picture News learns exclusively, are now negotiating loans with local and New York bankers.

Small independents, many of them "quickies," who were thrown out of the picture by the volcanic talker movement, and those who cried quits pending stabilization of sound production, are known to have been quietly shaping plans for a turnout of cheap programmers as rapidly as in the days of silents.

This group of third and fourth string producers, after waiting two years for the comeback, believe the time is now ripe when a market for cheap Westerns and comedy-dramas will reach proportions necessary to convince Hollywood's bankers that a sufficient return on the investment is assured.

With the new technical aspect of production, which sent nearly all of Hollywood "back to school," now clarified to a great extent, and a definite formula for making foreign versions beginning to shape itself, the independents are rushing to banks for support. Many of them, however, are not having an easy time of it with the bankers when the latter are told of the two-year layoff. It's a tough job to convince the money boys that this dormant period was forced by a revolutionary movement in the industry and its resultant technical and economical changes.

Lee and "Jake" Battle "Andy" Over Capitol Site

Washington—No less a personage than Secretary of the Treasury Mellon was called upon in legal papers by Lee and Jacob Shubert to show cause why the government should not be restrained from demolishing Poli's theatre property to make way for erection of new Federal buildings.

The suit claims that the government leased the property to Poli in 1922 and the latter assigned his interest to the Shuberts, who were informed in February by Secretary Mellon that their lease was at an end. The Shuberts, however, claim the lease has nine more years to run. The plaintiffs have since tendered regular monthly rentals, which have been refused.

U. K. Quota Changes

London—On Oct. 1 the period in which advance bookings are permitted will be cut to six months. This is in line with provisions of the quota law passed in 1927 and which provided for a periodical reduction of time for advance bookings.

The Babel Tower

Hollywood producers who think they have a tough job producing Spanish, French and German versions might take a peep into the Joinville studios near Paris, where a schedule of 110 talkers, of various companies, calls for the use of 17 languages and dialects. They are now making a Rumanian version.

U. A. Organizes Rumor Division To Serve Public

United Artists has established a Rumor Department, with Warren Nolan officiating, to give the customers in the market for reports, gossip and what not quick and efficient service. Hereafter, when they hear that Mary Pickford is joining Paramount, Howard Hughes is buying U. A. or that Chaplin is taking vocal lessons, the eager public is invited to apply to Mr. Nolan, who has issued the following prospectus about the innovation:

Warren Nolan

"The Rumor Department, organized to shatter myths concocted by the bright boys and girls who cook them up every hour on the hour, will be open from 9 A. M. to 5:30 P. M. A plan is even being evolved whereby denials will be issued before rumors are published, thus retiring the side with no hits, no runs and (ah!) no errors.

"Brother Nolan, the ancient mariner, will

Mrs. Duncan Sets $50,000 As Price of Renaldo's Love

Los Angeles—Nothing less than $50,000 will satisfy Mrs. Suzette Duncan in place of the lost love of her husband, Duncan Renaldo, who, the plaintiff claims in a court action, was stolen from here by Edwina Booth when the latter and Duncan were in Africa making "Trader Horn" for M-G-M.

Chaplin Wants 4 Millions From England—or Else

London—Sales quota of $4,000,000 is said to have been set on "City Lights" by Charles Chaplin. Thus, the long wait of the comedian between pictures will cost England exactly $2,000,000 more than his previous picture, which is plenty expensive, in the belief of local exhibitors.

The Insiders' Outlook

ONE of the backwashes of the epidemic of bootleg equipment is recounted in the case of the head of a distribution division who had poured plenty into an attempt to put over such an equipment, dropping a sizeable wad for his backer.

When the crash came, he went back to work selling films, getting jurisdiction over a number of exchanges. To take care of his erstwhile backer, he placed him on the payroll in what is described as a sinecure at a comfortable salary per. The pay-off went unmolested for a long time before the suspicions of the home office were aroused, but once they were, things moved fast and both the former backer and the exchange exec were given the air.

Song o' My Purse

Fox probably will not make any more pictures starring John McCormack, the Irish tenor. The studios think the tariff is more than the traffic will bear and that too much salary was paid the singer for his work in "Song o' My Heart," which ran well into six figures. However, Fox still has an option on McCormack's services and, if conditions should change, maybe the studio moguls will change their minds. The singer is to arrive in Hollywood late in October.

Victory

Tiffany contracted with Warners for Brunswick recording for its productions, but the initial releases brought kicks from exhibitors and Tiffany held up several productions four to six weeks while it made new recordings with Victor for the pictures. "Hot Curves" was supposed to have been one of those held up four weeks. Exchanges now are being supplied with Victor records for "Journey's End" bookings. The disc first used with it was Brunswick's.

Tremolo Politics

All of the yes-men aren't on the Coast. You'll find plenty of them in New York. For instance, there's one, in charge of a sales division, who has hung onto his job through many administrations by his ability to switch allegiance overnight. Colleagues have been ousted, but he has stuck through thick and thin.

As a salesman he is missing on a number of cylinders. He produces results simply because on taking the job he inherited a crew of branch managers who could sign up with any company in the field. His instructions to them consist entirely of demands for bigger and better prices. They smile, file away the communiques, and use their own judgment as before.

But our friend shines particularly during sales conventions. His voice choking with emotion, he will refer to "our beloved president" or "that wonderful genius, our general manager." He repeats the performance, letter perfect, when another batch of higher-ups step into office.

His equals knew how to sell, but not how to slice the bologney. They're out and he's in. The answer is yes.

Probably You'd Like to Know

Rumblings

It is possible—barely so—that a key figure in one of the major companies of the industry will move his baggage into an equally important spot in another big outfit. If it happens and aside from the wave of surprise which a switch of this magnitude would occasion, you might as well know now while the matter is being discussed informally that the bankers are behind it all.

The present superior of this man would hate to see him move, for this chap's record is one of real accomplishment on behalf of his current business love. But the influence of the bankers who are considering the change is so great that the new set-up might be yet arranged, impossible as its surface markings would have it appear.

Big league, this one.

Torrid Trading

Trading of screen rights to former silent productions is still a popular pastime among Coast studios, and many humorous inside tales result.

One scenario head is particularly adept at bargaining for exchanges, although he is cautious not to become involved in deals that he does not wish to go through. Recently another large studio requested trading terms for screen rights to a particular novel which had been a substantial success in silent form.

Before the shrewd bargainer had finished, the other studio offered screen rights to eight western stories by a well known author; each of which originally had cost double the price of the one story wanted. The deal got cold—then off, when first studio decided not to produce any westerns during the coming season.

With a Spade

A big banker, believing that his affiliated picture interests are entirely too over-optimistic in regards current business and future possibilities, has secretly engaged a leading Wall Street statistical service to get the real inside. It seems that the picture boys would like Mr. Banker to furnish another slice of dough, and sold him a bill of goods as to conditions being unusually great, particularly insofar as box office receipts and attendance are concerned. The statistical sleuths have begun digging and are said to have unearthed plenty so far.

$10,000,000 Annually To Be Put Into Distributors' Pockets by Zoning U. S.

"Sandy" MacEpstein

An independent producer had just arrived in New York from Hollywood with the first print of his new talker. The usual thing followed, i.e., invitations to the trade press and foreign and domestic distributors to attend a showing.

Next on the list of arrangements was a visit to a public projection room on 42nd street, where New York's "film row" commences. The two-dollar-per-reel rate, however, was too steep, so he wandered to 44th Street, where the fee was $1.50. Still too high, so the "indie" called on a projectionist in 46th. Inquiries there revealed a $1.25 fee. This was satisfactory, but there was still one more stop, and that at 49th street. At this spot, the projectionist charged only $1. He stopped there, satisfied but sorry that the film center did not extend further uptown.

Exhibitors to Know Where They Stand on Releases Under New System

Zoning of the United States, when completed, will save distributors $10,000,000 annually, under the system now being advocated, Motion Picture News learns. This will be made possible by eliminating confusion over playdates and enabling distributors to clean up their various runs in 60 days after the expiration of the first-run protection.

This scheme of things will be advantageous to the subsequent runs from the standpoint of availability. Where, heretofore, exhibitors were pretty much up in the air as to the dates when they would receive pictures under contract, due to failure of the first run to release them, the new system provides for automatic release to subsequent runs, so that if the first runs do not keep up on playing time, they lose out on protection.

There are a number of inequalities complained of by independent exhibitors, but these are being worked out gradually, although in some sections the independents insist that what they term exorbitant demands must be modified.

Another big angle from both the distributor and exhibitor viewpoint is that the system will eliminate much overbuying. Subsequents, forced into the open market to buy pictures because those under contract were unavailable, under the new scheme of things can better gauge their needs. From the distributor standpoint this safeguards playdates, and removes the overbuying excuse on availability.

Showmanship and Flops

An old belief that pictures, no matter how good from a production standpoint, cannot make money if they lack box-office values has again been knocked for the count. Shrewd showmanship and a little elbow grease will scout this antiquidated creed, as proven in the results of a close check-up on "With Byrd at the South Pole" by a Motion Picture News reporter who visited several small towns near-by New York. The survey established that the picture was a total flop when put on "cold," but made money where the exhibitor used intelligence and hard work.

Admittedly handicapped by lack of b. o. values, the Byrd film is understood to be playing to less than average in most spots, but where exhibitors discounted the handicap and waged a stiff battle to put it over, the picture immediately jumped out of the red.

N. W. Unit Would Zone Each House By Rental Price

Minneapolis—Plenty of squawking on protection demands, with Paramount Publix on the spot, is scheduled to highlight the special convention here Sept. 23 and 24 of the Northwest exhibitor unit. The protection meetings have been resumed, but progress is reported as slow.

One of the surprise proposals of the exhibitors is that rental price be the only factor in determining protection, a proposition that most exhibitors probably would like to agree to if that were possible from their viewpoint. This plan would, in effect, make each theatre an individual buying unit, its protection determined by the amount the theatre would be willing to pay.

As an example, there would be a national release date when rentals would be at a price only first runs could afford, with the price decreasing according to run and age of the picture.

Some exhibitors have been advocating boycott of Paramount for protection demands of Publix, others charge that Paramount is using the protection demands as a wedge to hold up sale of other product until its own is set. Another allegation is that the company is getting other companies to stand by the zoning proposals, and then steps in and sells its product first on different terms.

The proposed new contract will be discussed also at the forthcoming meetings here.

Lila Lee Recovers

Independents to Fight Percentage Bookings at Meet

Detroit—Somewhat of a jolt for claims that exhibitors favor percentage bookings, so far as Michigan is concerned, at least, is due at the annual convention of state independents to be held at the Tantlind Hotel, Grand Rapids, Oct. 5 to 8.

H. M. Richey

Michigan will analyze the proposed new standard form of license agreement at the forthcoming session, with H. M. Richey, business manager and member of the 5-5-5 conferences, expected to outline the various clauses. The Tiffany franchise also will come in for considerable discussion. Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, and Oscar Hanson, Tiffany sales

Chicago Rezoning Efforts Renewed; Exhibitors Out

Chicago—Attempts to work out a new protection system for the metropolitan area and downstate Illinois are still being made by a group of Chicago distributors following the failure of previous efforts at rezoning. No exhibitor representatives are associated with the present attempts to work out improved protection regulations for the city and state. Frequent disagreements between distributors and exhibitors led to the break-up of earlier rezoning meetings here and nullified all proposals.

The distributors are now attempting to formulate recommendations for obviously unfair situations and get them on paper before exhibitors' objections can throw them into the discard. C. C. Pettijohn has made several visits to town for consultations over the legal form of those recommendations arrived at by the committee and is expected to return here before a final plan is evolved. When a revised protection system has been drafted it will then be submitted to exhibitors' representatives, who will be at liberty to make further revisions wherever necessary.

Goldwyn Out $40,000 as Colman Changes Lead

Hollywood—Samuel Goldwyn will take a loss of about $40,000 due to the cast change in Ronald Colman's new picture, which placed Loretta Young in the feminine lead in place of Constance Cummings. The report that there would be a $120,000 loss is unfounded, as most of the initial scenes can be used.

"Honest" Robber Gets Mercy from Laura La Plante

Chicago—Laura La Plante, faithful to her profession, proved herself a real showman when she appeared before a capacity house in Judge John H. Lyle's Felony Court here and pleaded that leniency be shown two colored porters and a maid who stood accused of the theft of jewelry valued at $7,000 from the actress.

Miss La Plante based her plea for mercy on a "sob" note which she said had been addressed to her by a sister of one of the accused. The note was produced in court. It read:

"Dear Miss La Plante: Please don't persecute my brother, Harry Rhodes, as he is jes an honest country boy who didn't mean to do you no wrong. He jes took them jewels to keep them safe till he got a reward. Yours truly, His Sister."

The note took no cognizance of the fact that Rhodes' idea of keeping the jewelry safe was to deposit it with a local pawnbroker. Nor, apparently, did Miss La Plante, at whose request grand larceny charges against the accused trio were changed to petty larceny and the three were placed on probation.

Miss La Plante's jewelry was taken from a Michigan Central train here and later recovered by a pawnshop detail. Her leniency boosted story values in local papers anywhere from a half to a full column.

The actress was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Lydia La Plante. She told reporters that she wasn't very much interested in movies any more, hasn't made a film in months, and that she intended to return to Hollywood at once.

U. A. Will Not Build Theatre Chain Abroad

London—Rumors linking Joseph M. Schenck's forthcoming visit here with a wholesale theatre-buying splurge are the "bunk," Motion Picture News learns. Schenck's interest in theatre activities will reach no further than the leasing of a London house for Charles Chaplin's "City Lights." The opening date will be determined upon Schenck's arrival.

Named Co-respondent

To Produce Abroad

J. G. Bachman, whose resignation from B. P. Schulberg's staff at the Paramount Coast studio was announced last week by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has left Hollywood for New York en route to Europe, where he will consider talker production. He is negotiating with several European concerns for production abroad.

U. S. Silent

Washington—While reports persist in New York that Fox has obtained a Department of Justice O. K. on the proposed merging of the Fox and Loew theatres, the department refuses to discuss the matter, pursuing its customary procedure. Another report says the department's approval is being withheld on proposed absorption of the M-G-M exchanges by Fox.

The department's policy, it is explained, is one of silence with respect to mergers both because it feels that publication of details might prove detrimental in event of disapproval and because of the possibility of speculation and stock manipulation.

W-B. Wide Film Machine Emerges From Coast Lab

Hollywood—Warner engineers this week called in studio execs to take a look at the new wide-film projector head upon which they have been working, behind locked doors, for many months.

The head is adaptable to 65 mm., unofficially accepted as standard for wide-film, and to 35 mm. Unlike the Fox Grandeur apparatus, which is constructed to show only 70 mm., the Warner machine can be changed over in a few minutes merely by switching the aperture, plate and lens, a simple process.

The new projector is entirely contained in a specially designed head which replaces the 35 mm. head now in use and will be marketed as Vitascope.

"A Soldier's Plaything," with Lotti Loder, Harry Langdon and Jean Hersholt, is the first to be released for Vitascope showing, with First National's "Kismet" and "Adios" to follow.

M-G-M's Realife Device Is Ready

Los Angeles—Realife, M-G-M's new wide-film process, will be premiered via "Billy, the Kid," which is due to open shortly at the Fox Criterion. The process is said to give the same effect as Fox Grandeur film, but is only standard size film and not 70 mm., as Grandeur.

When the picture is photographed, a wide-film camera is used. This wide-film negative is then printed on standard stock and when projected through a special lens it gives the wide effect. In this manner, the grain of the standard film, which is so apparent when enlarged, is removed through the condensation of the wide film, and when projection takes place the image is the same as when wide film is used.

Cost of equipping standard projectors for handling the Realife process is about $100, according to early estimates by M-G-M studio engineers. Only other expense would be in installation of a wide screen, which is sufficiently high at present to prevent hundreds of small exhibitors from using wide-film processes.

Travel and Talk Picture Vogue Coming to Fore

Just as the sound cartoon skyrocketed in public favor, so the travel and now talk pictures are coming to the fore in the short subject field this season. Practically every distributing firm which handles shorts will have one or more travel series, off-screen talk supplementing the action in most instances.

The lecture-travel picture vogue, which started before talkers, as they are generally known, got under way with presentation of "Simba." Some time later, James A. Fitz-Patrick, independent producer who had been making travelogues, added talk to his series. He, since has continued to produce and distributed travel talks.

Other subjects of this nature now on the market are "Vagabond Adventures" (Pathe); Robert Bruce subjects (Paramount); Rolling Stone series (Tiffany); "Strange As It Seems" (Universal); "Believe It or Not" (Warners); Burton Holmes Travelogues (M-G-M); Lyman Howe's Hodge Podge (Educational); Bray Scenics (Columbia) and Talking Picture Epics' short subjects.

Universal uses an off-screen voice in its newsreel and Paramount is using a similar plan on occasion. Fox formerly had a voice speaking the titles, but discontinued this on protest of Universal. Pathe News on occasion has used the off-screen voice.

British Exhibitors in Jam Over Violations of Quota

London—British courts are clogged with exhibitor violations of the quota act. Several weeks ago government agencies in charge of enforcing the measure instituted a vigorous campaign to put an end to wholesale violations.

Usual fine for showing less than five per cent British product during a year is usually five dollars.

Cop Robbed of Gun as Law Triumphs on Screen

Chicago—Patrolman Newton Ingraham of the Evanston police force, with two hours to spend before going on duty, dropped into the Varsity Theatre in the North Shore suburb, to see a picture. In consequence, he was unable to go on duty at all that night.

While the arm of the law triumphed on the screen some one in the audience stole Officer Ingraham's gun.

Great!

Hollywood—C. Gardner Sullivan credits war pictures which present horrors rather than romance with influencing the trend toward world peace, spelling the doom of world conflicts. And other production execs believe that this same trait of blood and brutality will spell the doom of war pictures. Too morbid, they claim.

"We Won," Says Steffes, as Wehrenberg Pooh-Poohs Allied St. Louis Invasion

Allied Pleased

"We went into St. Louis at the urgent request of independent exhibitors of the territory, who see in Allied the one chance to safeguard their business future," W. A. Steffes told MOTION PICTURE NEWS over the telephone from Chicago.

"The urgency of the situation is shown in the fact that 85 per cent of the independents on hand at St. Louis came to us and asked us concerning the Allied program after which they requested that we form an Allied unit in the zone.

"The turnout at St. Louis wasn't large, but we feel that we have made a fine beginning and that the new eastern Missouri and southern Illinois unit of Allied will be a militant one. Joe Desberger is to represent the new association on the Allied board of directors.

"We are so well pleased with the result achieved at St. Louis that we intend to launch immediately our campaign of expansion to other key cities."

Allied States to Carry Drive into All Key Cities

Drive of Allied States Association, begun early this week at St. Louis, will be carried to every exchange city in the nation where an Allied unit is not now operating, W. A. Steffes, association leader, told MOTION PICTURE NEWS over the telephone from Chicago. No time will be lost in continuing the campaign, according to Steffes, who expressed himself as "extremely gratified" over the results achieved at St. Louis.

Kansas City, Atlanta, Omaha, Philadelphia, New York, Buffalo and Washington are cities where Allied will organize units, it is understood, under the "an Allied unit in every exchange city" program the association has adopted. Memphis, home city of M. A. Lightman also is to be invaded.

Allied, according to Steffes, is extending its operations to all keys "at the urgent request of independent exhibitors, who see in Allied the bulwark of protection they need to insure their business future."

The St. Louis invasion was in response to such requests, Steffes asserted, and the new association formed there will be a militant one.

"All Quiet" London Run May Go Till Christmas

London—"All Quiet on the Western Front" will remain at the Alhambra here until Christmas, in the opinion of James V. Bryson, managing director for Universal in Great Britain.

New Allied Unit Is Formed While M. P. T. O. Is Holding Meet

St. Louis—First invasion of M. P. T. O. territory by Allied States Association in the latter's drive to establish a unit in each exchange center Thursday found both sides claiming victory.

"We are well pleased with the start we have made," W. A. Steffes, Allied leader, declares.

W. A. Steffes

"The so-called Allied invasion will have no effect on the M. P. T. O. organization," declared its president, Fred Wehrenberg.

The invasion took the form of an organization meeting held simultaneously with and at the same hotel at the convention of the eastern Missouri and southern Illinois association.

W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, H. M. Richey, Detroit, and Col. H. A. Cole, Dallas, were the Allied leaders who led the invasion, meeting with a number of independents, who formed the Allied Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, while the convention of the M. P. T. O. A. unit was in progress.

Meanwhile, the existing St. Louis zone unit, a strong supporter of the M. P. T. O. A., held its sessions apparently indifferent to the Allied gathering and re-elected Fred Wehrenberg as its president. M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., was a principal speaker at the sessions which gave tentative approval to the proposed zoning plan, condemned picketing in the present local musicians' strike.

Fred Wehrenberg

Officers elected in addition to Wehrenberg are: Louis C. Hehl, secretary-treasurer; S. E. Pirtle, I. W. Rodgers, J. F. Rees, J. C. Hewitt, vice-presidents, and G. M. Luttreel, sergeant-at-arms.

C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays organization, M. E. Comerford of the M. P. T. O. A., and Dr. Lee De Forest were unable to attend as scheduled. R. R. Biechele, head of the western Missouri and Kansas unit, who soon will face an Allied invasion, also was a speaker, as was Oscar Hanson, Tiffany sales manager.

The meeting of the new Allied unit was held behind closed doors. When it became known that the Allied leaders were at St. Louis, a number of independents sought them out and organization work was begun, after Allied aims and accomplishments were outlined.

Wehrenberg's Comment

St. Louis—"The so-called Allied invasion of St. Louis will have no real effect on the M. P. T. O. organization, Fred H. Wehrenberg, president, Thursday told MOTION PICTURE NEWS. "Instead of calling their own meeting, Steffes and his crowd stole in on another man's party, our annual convention.

"I understand a few disgruntled exhibitors attended a session in Steffees' room Tuesday afternoon. One or two exhibitors have been sore because our organization reduced their protection in the new zoning agreement, so that smaller theatres could live. Allied is welcome to that kind of member.

Steffes was not invited to our convention but, when I learned he was in town, I was courteous and asked him to say hello to the boys, but he declined to appear in the open. No representative theatres or real leaders have gone with Allied."

Laemmle Hears Universal Sales Reaching Peak

Universal sales at the present stage of the season are assuming record proportions, and with the sales force enthused over the new type of product being produced, the company may anticipate its biggest year, Carl Laemmle will be told upon his arrival at the home office Friday. The Universal chief is on his semi-annual visit for conferences with R. H. Cochrane, Phil Reisman, his new sales chief, and other company officials.

The production policy instituted by Carl Laemmle, Jr., is striking a responsive note in bookings in first runs, Reisman will tell the senior Laemmle.

Fireworks Seen In Stock Fraud

Several film personalities in and about New York are understood to be plenty interested over the outcome of a Federal grand jury investigation into theatre and picture activities of County Judge George W. Martin, who has been put on the spot by government authorities in connection with alleged improper financing methods used to plug Bayside Amusement Co. and Filmland Players, Inc. Judge Martin was connected with both firms.

New York's film row has been speculating over possible connection of picture folk who would be dragged into the mess when the Federal grand jury begins unearthing intimate facts concerning operation of the two companies.

Premier Spills Weird Notions On Censorship

Vancouver—People of British Columbia would like to know whether Premier Tolmie is running a government or a wholesale employment agency, the Vancouver Sun declares in attacking the premier's action in increasing censorship machinery in the province.

"Dr. Tolmie's entire political career in British Columbia has been a history of reckless and wholesale patronage," the newspaper says.

"Despite the fact that motion picture censorship is falling into disrepute in all civilized countries, the doctor increased the censorship board from one to three men. And then, on top of that, he created a censorship board of appeal—a complicated piece of machinery that could serve no purpose but to harass the motion picture industry and find jobs for faithful party workers.

"No wonder the budget of the province has jumped from $21,000,000 two years ago to almost $29,000,000 in the spring of this year."

Yates' Patent Unit Claims First Round in Lab Fight

Los Angeles—Cinema Patents claimed a victory yesterday over Columbia Pictures in the Federal Court when Judge Jacobs entered an order, over the defendants' objections, referring the infringement case pending against Columbia and its Horsley Laboratory to David B. Head, as special master, for an early trial.

The court's own calendar was too congested to reach trial inside of six months or a year and Cinema moved for the reference. Columbia's attorneys are said to have attempted to block the move, but were unsuccessful. Head fixed Oct. 27 as tentative date for trial.

Burns Detective Stories, New Educational Series

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, has acquired a series of 26 detective mysteries, based on true experiences of Detective William J. Burns. The detective will appear in each of these reels to explain the circumstances of the case. True Detective Stories Magazine will publish many of the cases to be included in the series. The November issue will carry "Two Anonymous Letters," which will be one of the early releases in the new series.

Two Fox Premieres Set

Hollywood—"The Big Trail," Fox production, will open at Grauman's Chinese Theatre Oct. 2, according to latest reports. The picture was finally set for sure, when grosses at the Chinese took a dive under five figures on "Hell's Angels," the current attraction.

"Just Imagine," another Fox talker, will open at the Fox Carthay Circle Oct. 10, with another world premiere. Both houses are operated on a two-a-day policy. "Just Imagine" follows "Holiday," which will have finished an eight-weeks run.

Milton Sills

Secret Rites to Be Held Friday For Milton Sills

Hollywood—To insure strict privacy and avoid the huge crowds that attend the funerals of screen stars, last rites for Milton Sills, who died of angina pectoris Monday while playing tennis, will be held secretly Friday, with only the immediate family in attendance. His widow, Doris Kenyon, has been in a state of collapse since the death.

The college professor who achieved fame in "he-man" roles on the screen had suffered from heart trouble for five years and was forced to retire from work for a time. He rose to stardom with First National, but his physical condition interrupted his stellar career. His last appearance was in Fox's "The Sea Wolf." His death resulted in general mourning throughout film circles, for Sills was a stranger to temperament or posing, and gave liberally of his time to promoting the art of pictures, delivering lectures at Harvard and before various organizations.

Sills and Miss Kenyon were married in October, 1926, and were parents of a son, Kenyon Clarence Sills. He had been divorced some time before by Gladys Edith Wynne, whom he married in London in 1920, having a daughter by that marriage. He was born in Chicago Jan. 12, 1882, was graduated from the University of Chicago in 1903 and for two years held a fellowship in philosophy. After appearing on the stage he entered motion pictures in 1914. His outstanding silent roles were in First National's "Men of Steel" and "The Sea Hawk." "The Barker" was his first talker venture.

To Retitle "Royal Family"

Hollywood—Paramount is searching for a title to "The Royal Family." The studio claims the present monicker lacks drawing appeal for exploitation purposes.

Publishers See Sound Pictures Used in Business

Sound motion pictures, projected by RCA Photophone portable reproducing equipment, were the feature of the program of entertainment arranged for the eleventh annual meeting of the National Publishers' Association, which was held this week at Skytop Lodge, country club situated upon the crest of the Pocono Mountains, near Cresco, Pa.

The National Publishers' Association includes in its membership the leading periodicals of the United States whose combined circulation exceeds more than 20,000,000 subscribers and news-stand sales and the annual meetings bring together perhaps the greatest number of magazine experts that assemble anywhere in the world.

Industry to Use Sound

"It is the consensus of opinion among magazine publishers that the sound motion picture will be employed by leading industrial and commercial organizations to a far greater extent than the silent picture," said one of the leaders of the association following the practical demonstration of the RCA Photophone portable equipment. "With sound the dominant factor on the screen today, the portable reproducing equipment provides the greatest means for the transportation of personalities that has yet been conceived. As an adjunct to the magazine and the newspaper, the sound picture possesses potentialities far beyond anything we can conceive today. That industry, education and commercial organizations will soon become conscious of its importance, there can be no doubt."

Publishing houses represented at the convention included the Curtis Publishing Company, the Crowell Publishing Company, the McGraw-Hill Publishing Company, the Butterick Company, the Angus Company and others.

Pictures shown were: "Caught Short" (M-G-M) and "To This Is London" (Fox) and the following shorts: "The Little Covered Wagon" and "In the Mountains" (Tiffany), "Match Play" (Educational), one of the Knute Rockne subjects (Pathe), and a special golf reel assembled by Ray Hall of Pathe News showing the play in the recent national opening. Photophone supplied a portable sound reproducer and an operator to project the convention program.

"The King of Jazz" has been produced in nine foreign-language versions. They are Spanish, Hungarian, French, German, Swedish, Italian, Portuguese, Czecho-Slovakian and Japanese. In each, a master of ceremonies is introduced, speaking in the language of the particular country.

Adapting "Aloha Oe"

Hollywood—Adele Buffington is doing the screen play on "Aloha Oe," which Al Rogel Prod. will produce. A cast for the talker has not been announced.

Pictures for the Elite and Reserved Seat Policy, Plan of Proposed Chain

Bologna

"Just a lot of bologna," was the way Joseph Schnitzer's office characterized reports that RKO is seeking to buy up contract of William LeBaron, its production chief. Schnitzer plans to leave for the Coast next week.

Broun Helps Old Six in Hot Air Spiel at AMPA

In a turnout which eclipsed anything that the A. M. P. A. has responded to in years, and with dainty bon mots, virile rhetoric and lightning syntax bouncing all over the speakers' table, Heywood Broun, prominent member of belles lettres, was introduced by Mike Simmons at the new administration's first official lunch yesterday.

Laughs proved to be the order of the day. Broun observed that Mike's career seemed to parallel his own, journalistically and politically. Mike came back fast and asserted that whereas Broun was merely a Congressional nominee, he had already come through with flying colors in a presidential election (framed). Simmons, however, tempered the aspersion by volunteering to give Broun the benefit of his ripe political experience.

The Old Political School

"Buy five cent cigars by the carload," wheezed Old Six, "and confine all your campaign speeches to speakeasies. In a speakeasy when a man gives you his word it's like a gambling debt—a promise of honor! No man ever renigs after you've paid for his Rock and Rye."

"I'll meet you in Washington," answered Broun.

Commenting on what the new administration had already done for the film industry, Mike admitted that he had been pretty lax. "Here I've been president for a full week," boomed Six Syllable, "and I've yet to issue an official statement that business is sound. Nor have I planned any good-will tours to Cuba or South America. In fact, I've still to read the Constitution of the A. M. P. A."

The Great (?) Napoleon

Simmons then went on, in subtle innuendo and broad inference, to reveal the incompetence, shoddiness and worthlessness, of all the preceding administrations; but how he, by his Napoleonic genius and herculean endeavors, would finally obliterate the handicaps he had inherited; and how, further, by his masterly mind and inexhaustible resourcefulness, would finally bring the members a reign of largess and plenty such as had never before been approximated in fraternal welfare.

(At this point the waiter dropped a demitasse and two pieces of pie in George Harvey's lap.

Mike then went on to introduce Broun as "that militant journalist, passionate poker player and fearless destroyer of chain letters."

"Hot dog!" yelled the members to the tune of Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," and all were pleased, although semi-conscious.

Class Houses for Keys, Fashionable Suburbs Is the Gag

Establishment of a chain of reserved-seat theatres throughout the nation is under discussion, and a prominent banking group is being interested in the project. Houses of the chain would charge $1 top and specialize in so-called class pictures.

Under the plan, houses would be established in key cities, after which the circuit would be extended to fashionable suburbs. The belief is that well-to-do patrons willing to patronize "class" pictures are passing them up because of their unwillingness to attend houses where they are not assured of seats or must stand in line.

Plans call for establishment of the first house at Evanston, Ill., and subsequent houses at Detroit, Boston and Philadelphia. If successful, the plan will be extended to other keys, particularly those which have fashionable suburbs.

A prominent theatre operator is sponsoring the reserved-seat chain, plans for which have reached a stage where announcement of its launching is expected soon.

Gets Division Post

J. L. Merrick, veteran executive and former sales manager of Educational, who has been named central division manager for Tiffany by Oscar Hanson, company sales head. He succeeds Henri Ellman.

Warners Set

Warner stockholders rallied to the aid of the company in its effort to raise $15,100,000 in new financing, subscribing to the 755,000 shares of new common at $20 a share, Harry M. Warner states.

Lame Duck May Push New Bill for Federal Control

Washington—Defeat of Rep. Grant M. Hudson in the Michigan primaries is leading to speculation as to whether the congressman, who is the author of the Hudson bill to place the film industry under Federal control, will attempt to reintroduce the measure as a lame duck at the short December session. Hudson was defeated by a liberal and this demonstrated viewpoint of his state weakens his position considerably, for as a lame duck he will not be able to muster much following. Accordingly, the "bluenoses" probably will cast about for some other standard-bearer in the house to lead their campaign to pillory the industry.

Declares Union Theatres Circuit 'Perfectly Sound'

Union Theatres, Ltd., of Australia, is entirely independent of any foreign companies and the financial condition of the company is "perfectly sound," Millard Johnson, American representative of the circuit, declares in a statement issued following receipt of a cablegram from Sydney.

Union, he says, has "unlimited backing from English banks and requires no financial assistance from any distributing organization." His statement was prompted by report that Paramount is seeking to buy an interest in the circuit.

Sound for All Theatres Of Hoyt Chain Scheduled

Sydney, Australia—All silent houses of the Hoyt-Thring group of Australian theatres will be wired, as an immediate result of the deal which gave Fox a "substantial interest" in the circuit. There are more than 100 theatres.

Plans Spanish Version

Hollywood—Universal is to make a Spanish version of the two-reeler featuring Slim Summerville, Eddie Gribbon and Pauline Garon. The title is "Parlez Vous."

U. A. Organizes Rumor Division To Serve Public

preside at the Rumor counter, garbed in a snug middy blouse. In the new game there is only one rule: the sleep of the stout fellow must not be disturbed by inquiries as to whether Howard Hughes has traded Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin to the Boston Red Sox for a left-handed shortstop and a halfback who can dropkick six service aces per chukker.

"Quaint as is the notion, signed contracts and definite facts will be announced when and as they come into being.

"Suppose somebody announced that Henry Ford was buying General Motors and merging it with United States Steel and putting Andrew Mellon in as office manager? How long (the question is rhetorical) would the smart young journalists continue to voice such pipe dreams about these other industries?"

French to Revise Quota, If, When, As and Perhaps

London reports mentioning a quick solution of quota disputes between France and America this week aided Old Man Sol in developing a series of fainting spells in the offices of New York executives, particularly foreign managers.

The yarn, branded as "plenty wet" by most distributing chiefs, mentioned the fact that French and American film interests had already agreed to a plan which would drastically cut down quota requirements, and would meet on Wednesday next in Paris for ratification.

The Hays organization, which at times has fought bitter battles in France for repeal or lightening of the quota, told Motion Picture News that their organization was unaware of the Franco-American quota "solution."

Vaudeville Names for Paramount's Shorts

Jack Benny and the team of Burns & Allen have been signed for Paramount shorts. Benny already has completed "A Broadway Romeo" for the company. Burns & Allen are en route to Europe for a six weeks' engagment and will resume screen work on their return.

West Coast Turning San Diego House to National

San Diego, Cal.—Pacific National Theatres, which operates the Aztec, Mission, Superba and Plaza here, is taking over the California. The house, which seats 2,500, is owned by Adolph Ramish, but has been operated by Fox West Coast.

New Device for Deaf

The new Acousticon Seatphone developed by Dictograph Products, and to be marketed to sound theatres by RCA Photophone, in a deal just closed by General Sales Manager Sydney E. Abel.

RCA to Market Device for Deaf In Sound Houses

RCA Photophone, in association with Dictograph Products, claim perfection of a theatre acoustical device to permit attendance at sound theatres of the hard-of-hearing, of which there are 10,000,000 in the United States.

The Acousticon Seatphone is a Dictaphone product which has been adapted to sound theatre use by RCA engineers. A receiver is held to the ear by means of a lorgnette handle in which is contained a cord extending to a plug which the user inserts in a receptable on the arm of the seat. This receptable provides the connection between the instrument and the theatre sound amplifying system. With the contact made, reception is immediate and its volume can be controlled to suit. A small lever permits 104 variations of sound, according to RCA.

First installation was made at Proctor's 58th St., New York.

M. C. Welcomed By Wife and Cop

Chicago—Charles Kaley, orchestra leader and picture house master of ceremonies, was welcomed back to Chicago after a long absence this week. In the reception line was a former Mrs. Kaley with a cop and a warrant charging the orchestra leader with being $5,250 in arrears in alimony payments.

Kaley was haled into court, paid $350 down on the past-due alimony, promised to pay the rest, and was permitted to leave in time to make the evening performance at the Palace Theatre, where he is appearing this week. A court order restraining Kaley from leaving the state before a settlement with his former wife has been made was also issued by the court.

$6.85 for "Hell's Angels" Story; Sex Cost More

The inside dope has been spilled regarding that $4,000,000 which Howard Hughes says he spent in making "Hell's Angels." When that sum was casually mentioned no one retorted: "Oh, yeah?" For Hughes had devoted three years to making it—and time is money, except to jailbirds. Now, however, the budget has been itemized by no less an authority than Harry Evans, picture critic for Life, and here is the lowdown:

Perhaps we can simplify the whole thing by submitting our idea of the scene that took place when Mr. Hughes and his expert advisers were working out the film budget:

Mr. H.: Now boys, I want this to be an epic.

Chorus (faster and with spirit): Yes, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. H.: Do you think we can manage to spend the four million on it?

Chorus: Yes . . . Positively yes, Mr. Hughes.

Mr. H.: Very well then. Here is the budget I have worked out. I'll read it:

Zeppelin Scenes	$1,000,000.00
Planes (used and destroyed)	1,000,000.00
Bombs	250,000.00
German speaking actors	500,000.00
English speaking actors	25,000.00
One (1) actress (Jean Harlowe)	Sex hundred thousand
Gown worn by Miss Harlowe for the big charity ball and later taken off for Ben Lyon	100,000.00
Wear and tear on Ben Lyon due to attacks by German and French women . . . and Miss Harlowe	50,000.00
Damages to throats of aviators talking back and forth to each other in planes	50,500.00
Oxford accents	3.75
Waltzers for ball room scene	24,468.00

Making Grand Total, gentlemen, of .....Four Million Dollars.

"Florodora" Plagiarism Action Is Dismissed

San Francisco—Following a motion last week by attorneys for the defendants, and which was agreed to by the plaintiff's lawyers, Federal Judge Paul J. McCormick dismissed without prejudice the copyright infringement case filed by William G. Curtis against Marion Davies and others associated with her in the filming of "The Florodora Girl."

Curtis had asked for damages aggregating in excess of $1,000,000, claiming that he was the sole owner to the rights of "Florodora" and the "Florodora Sextette," which he says were used in the filming of Miss Davies' "The Florodora Girl."

Bankers Went Overboard in Plugging Merger Advantages, Survey Reveals

Omigosh!

Reports have it that the Schlesingers paid $200,000 for control of the Ries patents, which are the basis of General Talking Pictures' fight for damages from Western Electric. According to this figure, the Schlesingers will obtain a profit of 56,000 per cent on their investment of $200,000, inasmuch as damages are understood to total $112,000,000.

Schlesinger in Need of Staff of Money-Counters

Two weeks ago Motion Picture News published a yarn in which it was stated the reputed wealth of Schlesinger interests would grow from $250,000,000 to the staggering total of $362,000,000—IF General Talking Pictures was victor in its patent-damage fight with Western Electric. The yarn, apparently, gave M. A. Schlesinger food for thought, because the following announcement was broadcast this week from his organization:

"Four internationally recognized banking authorities have been elected to the board of directors of (DeForest) General Talking Pictures Corporation. The move is an indication of the extreme optimism of M. A. Schlesinger, president of the company, in regard to the outcome of the appeal made by Western Elecetric against the recent decree of the Federal Court adjudicating the validity of the Ries patents. Should the decree be upheld by the Circuit Court of Appeals, the task of accounting profits and damages will assume titanic proportions and require the ultimate in banking experience."

Fox Earnings Last Half To Top Last Year Period

Fox earnings for the last half of 1930 will exceed those of the same period last year, it is indicated by contracts already on hand, Harley L. Clarke, president, told directors at a meeting Thursday. The quarterly dividend of $1 on the Class A and Class B shares was declared, payable Oct. 15 to stock of record Sept. 30. Third quarter earnings will top the second quarter's, it was stated.

Big 4 Set in Canada And at New England

Excellent Film Exchange, Toronto, has closed with Big 4 Prod. for distribution of 1930-31 product in Canada. World-Art Pictures of New England, operating at New Haven, obtained distribution of Big 4 Westerns in that territory.

Bombshell Hurled at Wall St. Disturbs Consolidation Specialists

Financial and economic advantages of big business consolidations are not as advantageous as the widely-touted propaganda of banking interests would have you believe.

Hurling a bombshell into Wall Street, where bankers made millions in the merger orgy of the past two years, a New York Times survey of merged companies' earnings greatly discounts merger advantages and caused plenty of uneasiness in the ranks of consolidation specialists who are blamed with exaggerating merits of amalgamation.

An analysis of the common stocks of 10 representative industrial companies, including Fox Film, which participated in the recent merger movement, indicates that they have depreciated $3,468,466,000, or an average of 59.8 per cent from their 1929 highs. For the same period, the Dow Jones industrial stock averages declined to 231.27 from a high of 381.17, an average fall of 39.3 from the high of 1929, and 20 per cent higher than the slump taken by merged interests.

It is now generally agreed by bankers, the survey reveals, that estimates of future earnings of amalgamated companies were frequently over-optimistic, and while it is agreed that the business depression was largely responsible for the disappointing earnings of some of the merged companies, many bankers feel that the expenses contingent upon the completion and financing of mergers was not fully appreciated by the investing and speculating public, and this factor is partly responsible for the more violent decline of the merger stocks.

Frequently, it is held, it takes several years for the advantages of some mergers to be reflected in the earnings of the amalgamated companies. Most of the mergers arranged last year involved sound companies which may be expected ultimately to benefit through the reduction in expenses and the improved marketing and production methods made possible by a larger organization, it is believed.

That there are dangers inherent in certain types of mergers and in too rapid expansion through consolidations is now the general opinion in banking circles.

Radio Passes Films

Selling 3,500,000 sets in 1930, the radio field is expected to pass the billion dollar mark in annual sales turnover.

Starting from scratch only a few short years ago, alarmed exhibitors expected radio to make radical inroads on picture house grosses, although total sales at that time had reached only a few millions yearly. Now with an annual billion dollar sales turnover, radio chiefs believe that field is still far from becoming a serious competitor to theatres.

No Fooling

Pomeroy, director, sound expert and technician, declares the film industry is suffering from the want of new ideas and something different, and prophesies that the first film organization making a talking picture unusual in effort, different in theme and superb in directorial treatment. will gain fortune and fame.

Nice Cuspidors, High Brow Mags, Chi Innovations

Chicago—With the opening of the Punch and Judy Theatre here September 18, the city gets its first swank house with an admission scale to correspond. Such things as individual overstuffed chairs, made to order at a reported price of $40 a copy, and cuspidors bearing a coat of arms are typical. Monogrammed cigarets, cafe demi tasse and tailor-made cakes will figure in lobby handouts, as the house, which will operate on a two-a-day policy, will also run intermissions. A slant on the class of trade expected is given by subscriptions the house has made to Vanity Fair, New Yorker, Vogue, House & Garden, Bookman and Atlantic Monthly. These will lie about the lobby to assist with that air of well-bred superiority. Ushers are said to be Yale grads.

"Abraham Lincoln" (U. A.) opens the house. Scale for opening night is $5.50 to $11, and $1 to $2.50 thereafter. A customer, on being advised of the opening night fare, innocently inquired if Abe had been signed for a personal appearance.

The Punch & Judy is the remodeled Central Theatre. It is situated well away from the theatre district in the Chicago Musical College building on Van Buren Street, just off Michigan Avenue. It seats 350. Louis Machat, head of the Cinema Art Guild, operators of the Cinema Art Theatre—"The house of shadow silence"—on the near north side, heads the Punch & Judy Theatre Corp.

them well, though sometimes they irk and gall," as one Hollywood wit puts it. Perhaps the "gall" refers to that which prompted Lita Grey to ask Charlie Chaplin for $950,000 in settlement of their marital differences or influenced Mildred Harris to insist upon the comedian forking over $107,500 for the same reason.

And Charlie isn't the only personality in town who was taken for a sleigh-ride over the old alimony course. Carey Wilson's bill from Nancy was $124,000, and Ronald Colman put up plenty to settle things with Thelma. Evelyn Brent got at least $52,000 from B. P. Fineman, not including jewelry, insurance, stocks, bonds, and "B. P.'s" last clean shirt.

Not satisfied with one alimony bill, Lloyd Hamilton decided to be a wee bit different and take on another. Lloyd has been having headaches ever since, with good old U. S. currency acting as the only bromo.

A. L. Wooldridge, one of Hollywood's uncountable studio newshounds, took the alimony question in hand the other day for an assignment and found the job so big he decided to turn out his yarn in serial form.

Wooldridge dug deeply into the records and unearthed the dope on John Gilbert's $156,000 payment to Leatrice Joy, which does not include $2,600 every year for the support of their child. When the latter reaches 18, the payments cease—and not before. Winifred Westover's balance sheet jumped $200,000 as a result of William H. Hart's settlement, while Adolph Menjou took it on the chin to the tune of $167,500 in a settlement made on his former "better half."

Cliff Edwards is still fighting the $104,000 bounty which is claimed to be due to Irent L. Edwards. The matter is still in court. Jean Harlowe, blonde mama in "Hell's Angels," recently obtained $200,000 from Charles F. McGrew, 3rd, son of a Chicago attorney. Al Santell and Hoot Gibson got off lucky, with the former paying $50,000 and Hoot $30,000. King Baggot, director, must pay $350 a week from the time of their separation in August, 1926, and in addition half of all he earned over $850 a week, as well as $100 a month for the support of his son.

There are dozens of others in Hollywood who belong to the alimony club, many of them having been in and out of jail many times for failure to keep up payments, particularly players who received a financial setback from talkers. As a matter of fact, you're not considered "sophisticated" in some Hollywood circles unless you are one of the alimony army. The boys in Hollywood apparently like nothing better than to be classed as "sophisticates."

3 More from Stahl for "U"

Hollywood—John M. Stahl will continue on Universal's directors' roster, having been given a new contract for three more. Original agreement was for one, "Lady Surrenders," completed this week.

Realism

Calgary, Alberta—Constables of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police appearing in "Tonight and You," a Fox feature recently made at Jasper Park, will look and act like real members of the famous force as a result of the carrying out of an arrangement with the Canadian Government whereby the movie-made constables were drilled and inspected by Sergt.-Major H. M. Fowle, instructor of the Mounted Police. Officials at R. C. M. P. headquarters made the suggestion for this supervision because certain Mountie portrayals had not been in keeping with realities. Uniforms and hair cuts were closely inspected each morning by the police instructor and he gave several laggards a real drilling.

Scranton Papers Bar Publicity; Call Films 'Tripe'

Scranton, Pa.—Two newspapers, the morning Republican and the evening Times, have placed a ban on free publicity for pictures, at the same time declaring that they would accept no complimentary tickets from the theatres in this town, which is now dominated entirely by Paramount Publix. Hereafter "reading notices" must be paid for as advertising, they announce.

In explaining the action, the Times stated that up to the time of the acquisition on Aug. 1 by Paramount of the Comerford circuit, "this newspaper had pleasant business and commercial relationships" with the latter, but that Paramount Publix "by its conduct since has demonstrated that it has no interest in the community except to remove as much money therefrom as is possible."

Shortly after Paramount began operating the theatres in Scranton a curb was put on the distribution of free tickets, and officials of the circuit are wondering if the reversal of the newspapers' policy is a case of cause and effect.

The reading notices, according to the Times, "were editorially obnoxious because of their hackneyed insistence on the superlative merit of any sort of tripe that might be current in a given city."

Wilk Sees Fertile Play, Story Field in Germany

Jacob Wilk's recent tour through Europe for Warners resulted in the former tying up new screen material and writers. Germany is fast becoming a fertile field for play and story material designed for screen treatment, states Wilk, who claims a new generation of writers has sprung up since commencement of the reconstruction period following the late war.

In a packed Los Angeles-Chicago train, they say, the only visitors to the dining cars were moochers who grabbed oyster crackers and lumps of sugar from the tables on their way through. One waiter lost a watch while this traffic was at its peak, and another who had been inveigled into a crap game aboard train won a song-writer's option with a major producing company which he had "faded" with a ham sandwich.

Hamilton's Pal Shot at Hollywood Whoopee Party

Los Angeles—Douglas Kendall, hardware merchant who was host to a group of local business and picture celebrities at a party in his house, is recovering from a gun wound received when the merrymakers, after indulging in too much "whoopee water," made a target out of a kitchen cabinet. Lloyd Hamilton, friend of Kendall's, rushed the latter to Hollywood Hospital.

Shooting Sound into Silent Successes Shooing Public Away; Want 'Em Fresh

Film Famine In Ireland

Dublin—Theatre owners throughout Dublin and the Free State are threatened with a severe film shortage. All distributors have steadfastly refused to import because of the new censorship powers given the governmental board.

More than 20% of a recent group of importations, sound and silent, were marked taboo by the Irish censors, who are being supported in majority of cases by an appeals board.

The Minister of Justice will meet distributors in an effort to iron out difficulties.

Six Aafa-Tobis Talkers in '30-31

Berlin—Completely junking all silent production, Aafa-Tobis Prod. this week completed plans for an all-talker program for 1930-31.

Led by "Storms Above the Mont Blanc," a series of six will be made with Tobis sound system. Dr. Arnold Fanck is the author of the first and will direct. In the cast are Leni Riefenstahl, Sepp Rist, Ernst Petersen and the German pilot, Ernst Udet.

Others include "Musician from Vienna," adapted to Schubert melodies; "The Sloop Captain," a comedy with Harry Liedtke, Fritz Kampers, Maria Paudler and Lia Eibenschuetz; two Mady Christians and one from the operetta, "Beggar Student," by Carl Milloecker.

The Mady Christian vehicles include "Lieutenant of the Hussars," an operetta adapted by Robert Stolz and Fritz Rotter, and "His Last Letter," by Rudolf Nelson.

American General Film Corp., New York, will distribute in the U. S. and Canada.

Cliff Work Gets RKO Division in Shake-Up

Vincent has been with RKO for many years and some time ago took a prolonged vacation and Work took over the duties of Vincent's office. Ted Lewis Disbanding Gang; Hard to Handle

San Francisco—Ted Lewis and his orchestra have returned to New York from a record breaking engagement at the Empire, Paris. The "high hatted tragedian" of song is disbanding his old organization, he announces, because many of its members having been with the band for years, have become too tough to handle. He plans a new and youthful collegiate personnel.

Plan Return of Westerns in U. K.

London—C. A. Stimson, vice-president of Big 4 Film Corp., New York, has arrived here to work out details for the return of adventure and Western stories with British distributors. This type of product received a severe setback when talkers were innovated two years ago and, except for a few silent Westerns, and a comparatively small number of talkers, outdoor action pictures have made little headway in the British Isles during the past two years.

Big 4, according to Stimson, will soon launch a second series of six Western talkers, for independent release in 1930-31.

Amateur Photographer Cashes in on Shipwreck

Hollywood—C. G. Mills, an engineer for General Motors, has discovered that amateur photography sometimes proves a valuable hobby. Mills was aboard the steamer Ventura when she rescued the passengers of the ill-fated Tahiti, which sank in the Pacific a few weeks ago.

Mills, one of several amateurs who took pictures of the rescue with a 16-millimeter camera, was the only one whose film was fit to use. Fox Movietone News and Hearst Metrotone News bought the rights

Exhibitors Declare That Fans Turn Thumbs Down on Remade Films

Exhibitors in the hinterland, where men may take their films with dignified acquiescence but where the women step right up and tell the manager why they think the show is lousy, are turning thumbs down on "repeats," the films which, because they scored a hit in silents, now are being reground for sound.

There is a distinct aversion in the open spaces to paying hard-earned shekels to see a film twice, even if it is doctored with the new devices of the microphone. When a story's told it's told, fans feel, and the addition of yowls and theme songs bring no business when there is a brand new picture around the corner.

Managers seem to feel that the propensity of the film moguls to take some big box-office success of days gone by and shoot it full of sound effects will make a big dent in the red inkwells. For many a fan cherishes his memory of an actor's performance in a certain picture and has no desire to see that same actor, or another, try to duplicate his work, embellished with vocal effects. The performance of Dick Barthelmess in "Broken Blossoms" was a thing of beauty. The same performance with words and music might be another matter.

Tabbing Public Taste

They keep ubiquitous hands on the public pulse, these exhibitors in the sticks, where Mrs. Jones has time to talk the picture over with the boy in the front of the house. They will tell you that there should be enough new stories to go around and if they can't be furnished, additional time can be put in at miniature golf courses, bowling alleys and knitting bees.

They point out that a bookworm may peruse a volume twice, but the average movie fan will see a picture once and call it a day.

As a matter of record, many theatregoers who have seen legitimate productions will skirt the same vehicle in its celluloid guise because they are familiar with the story. While personalities still are the dominating draw in the by-roads, no star is big enough, they say, to bring his public in for a second glimpse of him in the same yarn.

Pathe's Boyd Is "Bill" To Avoid Confusion

Hollywood—Pathe has decided to call their William Boyd, "Bill" Boyd hereafter, in order to halt confusion with the William Boyd, stage player, who has recently became active in talkers. Recent news stories concerning a divorce involving the stage player which ran carrying pictures of "Bill" Boyd, led to the change.

Pays Musicians For Year While They Are Idling

Philadelphia—Warner-Stanley and Fox and 200 local musicians are digging in for what promises to be a finish fight on the question of the minimum orchestras to be employed at the Mastbaum, Earle and Fox here. Intermediaries are seeking to bring about a reconciliation, but a long drawn-out battle is anticipated. Meanwhile, stage shows have been dropped by the theatres.

Musicians at the three houses took the air last Thursday, when the ten-day truce with the managers expired. All three houses are presenting elaborate programs of sound and talking shorts in lieu of the stage bill and all announced at the expiration of the first day of the strike that business was normal. In fact, at the Fox business was tremendous on Friday, the standees assembling by the time the second show had started in the afternoon. The film was "Let's Go Native," starring Jack Oakie, who enjoys a great local following, so this particular film can not be used as a real gauge. With "Call of the Flesh" and "Man Trouble," respectively, the Mastbaum and the Earle appeared to be getting an average play.

Speaking for the Stanley-Warner interests, William M. Goldman declared that the reduced staffs are made necessary by the introduction of talking pictures, which not only do not require, but do not permit, accompaniment of musicians.

"It must be understood in the first place," he said, "that there is no question between the Stanley Company of America and the musicians concerning wages, working conditions, or recognition of the musicians' union. The Stanley Company has always paid and is now paying wages at the union scale and has always acquiesced to working conditions specified by the union. It has always contracted directly with the union. There therefore is nothing at issue in the matters which ordinarily cause labor disputes. Neither is there any ill-feeling of any kind."

His statement continued to explain that the company had found itself in the position where it had absolutely no work for a large number of musicians formerly employed.

Held Bag for Year

"For a period of almost a year," said Goldman, "the company has kept on its payroll about 125 men to whom it has been unable to furnish employment, representing a cost of almost $500,000. At one theatre in Philadelphia (the Aldine), which has been closed for 40 weeks, the company has paid $1,111 a week to musicians who had absolutely no work to do. The result is in no way the fault of the men, but it is clearly not the fault of the Stanley Company. We cannot set back the wheels of progress and substitute silent pictures which our patrons do not want. Nor is it just or even possible for this company to pension indefinitely the musicians who find themselves without work. In carrying this burden for one year, this company has been much more generous to the musicians than it has been fair to its stockholders." Mr. Goldman concluded his statement by saying that the Stanley-Warner Company could employ, at the outside, only 86 musicians.

David Idzal, manager of the Fox, issued virtually the same sort of statement, offering to employ, at union rates, the number of musicians the house needed, but no more.

The musicians have threatened to call out the stagehands and the operators in sympathy, but this move is apparently not feared by the managers. It is generally believed that the operators will not join the strike. It was announced at the Stanley office on Friday that, though the withdrawal of stage shows left them without work, the stagehands would be retained on the payroll in recognition of the fact that their plight was in no way their own fault.

One of the arbitration moves was a suggestion by Dr. Theodore Fineman, leader of the Philharmonic Society of Philadelphia, that the musicians accept a minimum wage rate reduction from $80 per week to $50 and that the theatre operators employ a greater number of musicians at lower wage, thus reducing unemployment among the members of the union. There was no indication that the proposition would be accepted by either side.

Paramount's Break

Philadelphia—Paramount gets the break in its proposed invasion of Philadelphia if the strike of musicians continues next month, when the firm's local first-run stand, Keith's Chestnut, is to be opened by Al Boyd's company. The Publix units are tied up locally under a Warner contract, so if the strike hadn't happened along, these units would be playing Paramount's opposition. With stage shows out, due to the strike, Paramount will be able to start from scratch with its competition.

House Threatens to Close Over Wage Argument

Marshalltown, Ia.—Three weeks have been spent in conferences between the managers and projectionists in regard to the wage schedule here. The Strand, Publix house, has refused to sign the pact agreed to by the other theatres and has announced that it will close its doors for the winter season, rather than employ the union operators at the prices they ask. The other Publix house, the Casino, with the Capitol, Charles Dunsmoor's house, have reached an agreement with the projectionists. Another independent theatre is expected to agree to the pact.

The terms proposed allow the projectionists an increase of $2.50 a week with greater remuneration for overtime. It also provides for two men in a booth with little other change in the working conditions of the operators.

'Fire Guard' Only Fire Hazard in Original Racket

Milwaukee—Something exhibitors here are worrying about was brought out at the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Theatre Owners' Association at Cedar Lake in what they view as labor racketeering. In some cities, labor leaders are demanding that for "fire prevention" purposes, a member of the stagehands' union ought to be kept backstage in every film house, regardless of whether it offered flesh shows or not.

As a result, in the city of Oshkosh an ordinance was passed, requiring that all houses, regardless of whether they had stage shows, keep posted during exhibiting hours a stagehand for "fire prevention" purposes. This despite a barrel of evidence that there was nothing behind the screen to cause a fire. One Oshkosh manager reporting to the convention stated that in his house he is hard put to keep the "fire protection" worker from sitting there smoking cigarettes, one after another, during his "watch." In his opinion, the watchman is the first real fire hazard that has existed back-stage.

At Lake Winnebago, Fond du Lac, the labor men heard of the success of the Oshkosh plan and thought it sounded good enough for them. They went to the city council and through the labor vote drummed up the necessary sentiment. Then they went to the mayor and he was willing. Meanwhile the exhibitors heard about it and Bill Ainsworth and a few co-workers also went to the mayor. They proposed that, inasmuch as it was a civic fire prevention idea, the best thing to do, if they were going to have a man, was to put a fireman from the fire department backstage. That sounded good to the mayor. So he announced to the labor crowd that their "fire prevention" idea was first class; that the exhibitors were okay, but that he felt he could only endorse the plan if a regular member of the fire department, a trained fire-fighter, were put backstage.

The enthusiasm which the stagehands group had been displaying for fire prevention work suddenly ceased. The matter became colorless and uninteresting. So much so, in fact, that in Fond du Lac the whole thing was dropped quickly, like a hot coal, to use "fire prevention" language.

Labor Contracts Closed By Rochester Crafts

Rochester, N. Y.—With the exception of an extra hour of rehearsal agreed to by the musicians, all stage, operators' and musicians' unions signed up for a renewal of wage contracts with theatre operators here.

Alderman Operators' Strike Ally

Minneapolis—Sympathetic action for striking operators was anticipated in an ordinance to be introduced by Ald. Gisslen, providing for two men in the booths of sound houses. This issue caused the strike at independent theatres. The ordinance would be in the interest of public safety, the alderman says. Meanwhile, 22 neighborhoods affected were under police guard. Effort to secure an injunction restraining picketing was unsuccessful. A temporary injunction restraining damage of property was in force.

Operators Win 2 Men in Booth, but Accept Reduction

Milwaukee—After four weeks of wrangling, during which theatre operators functioned under an expired agreement with the owners, the threatened operators' strike has been averted and a settlement of the wage question and the booth personnel problem has been made through a compromise agreement. Fred S. Meyer, recently elected president of the M. P. T. O. W. and chairman of the arbitration committee of the local theatre group, announced signing of a two-year agreement, in which the theatres yielded to the demand for two men in a booth.

In return for this concession, the operators took a 10-cents-an-hour cut in wages in the big houses for the first year of the agreement and a 5-cent cut for the second year. The wage scale in Classes 1, 2 and 3, which embrace the big downtown, the de luxe and the semi-de luxe houses, for the first year of the new agreement, is respectively $2.05, $2.00 and $1.80 per hour, with 5 cents per hour higher for the second year of the agreement. An unmentioned increase in operators' scale in the combination houses showing film and offering stage attractions was also agreed upon, but no details of the increase, which was small, were given out.

In the Class 3 and 4 houses, embracing the smaller theatres, the new wage scale calls for $70 per week in Class 4 and $65 in Class 5 where sound-on-film only is used, and $90 in Class 4 and $82.50 in Class 5 where both disc and film are used.

Squawk Anticipated

About 170 men in the Milwaukee territory are affected by the new contract. Some of the smaller theatres are not going to like the new agreement, Meyer expects, but he regards it as the best that four weeks of argument could produce, with a threatened walkout impending. The Milwaukee wage scale is lower than in most cities.

With settlement of the operators' troubles, there now remains only the stagehands to deal with and two of the big labor questions confront the local houses, namely, operators and musicians, have been settled within the past few weeks. The stagehand problem is complicated, but it is anticipated that it will be ironed out without washing any dirty linen in public and without any tieups or blockading.

Perhaps the bombing of non-union houses will cease, now that peace has been declared. For nearly a year, but particularly during the past few months, paint bombs and dynamite bombs have been flung about in the direction of non-union houses, with a disregard for life and property that finally resulted in newspaper demands for police action. The union leaders emphatically denied that their organization was in any way connected with the outrages, making public condemnation of such a practice. The fact that only non-union houses were attacked by paint sprayers and other hoodlums, however, indicated that the labor question must have been involved somewhere.

Protection

Middletown, Pa.—Preventing competition by legislation is the method to be employed in this town of 6,078, if an ordinance now pending is passed. The measure provides that only the existing theatre shall be licensed until the population passes 10,000.

Legislature to Pull Trick Stuff In Wisconsin?

Milwaukee—Theatre owners here are beginning to wonder what the next session of the Wisconsin legislature is going to mean to them. There has been a quite well-founded report current here during the past few weeks that some new and novel legislation is in the hopper.

One of the bills which rumor has it is to be offered by labor at the next session will be one requiring the presence in every booth of an attendant who must keep his hand on the douser at all times, in case of fire. Another is a proposal to make eastern standard time official in eastern Wisconsin, now more than 200 miles from the western end of the eastern zone.

Some bluenoses want to give force and effect to the 50-year-old blue laws now on the statute books. In addition it is anticipated that the regulation censorship measures will be proposed.

Exhibitors will keep a watchful eye on the type of men elected in Wisconsin in November, working against their avowed opponents in an attempt to keep the legislature free from zealots and fanatics. In addition, they may again interest themselves in an attempt to line up opposition to the obsolete "blue" laws, combining, with baseball organizations, football organizations, filling station and garage owners and various retail organizations whose members are forced to keep open on Sunday by custom, although they violate non-enforced laws now on the books in so doing.

Musicians Get Chance In Toronto

Toronto—Incidental music for dialogue pictures and special musical features are part of the plan proposed by Famous Players Canadian Corp., to alleviate unemployment of musicians here. To that end, negotiations are under way with the Musical Protective Associations for the return of orchestras to at least 14 local houses. About 100 musicians would be played, the first orchestra being scheduled to be organized within the next couple of weeks. The rest would be organized throughout the fall.

Labor Leader Charged With Intimidating

Toronto—William P. Covert, third vice-president of the Operators' and Stagehands' International, was arrested on a charge of intimidation of Anthony Patzalek, independent exhibitor of Hamilton, who swore out a warrant for his arrest following an argument over the unionizing of his theatre. Magistrate Burbridge, in Hamilton police court, reserved decision.

"You don't want a taste of Chicago, do you?" is the threat made by Covert, according to Patzalek's story to the police. Covert denied making the remark.

Following closely upon the bomb outrage in which the Queen's, Hamilton, was wrecked, the arrest created a real flurry. It is the latest development in the long-waged war between the operators and various Hamilton exhibitors who have been running open shop.

William Yates, manager of the Queen's, declared that the wrecking of the house was the latest of a long series of outrages. Several weeks previously some one broke into the theatre, slashed the screen to shreds and cut the wires of the projection room.

All Talk of Strike at Boston Off; Deals Near

Boston—While Publix, Orpheum, Loew's and perhaps one other of the chains have apparently settled the situation with the unions, so far as projectionists and stagehands are concerned, there is still a considerable amount of negotiation under way in the matter of musicians, with the outlook promising.

The legitimate theatres were first to settle their differences and are working under a new two-year agreement.

Tentative working agreements are under way with the independent owners and it is probable that within a few days satisfactory agreement will be reached for another two-year term. All talk of a strike is off.

Omaha Musician Victory Called an Empty One

Omaha—The musicians' union here won only an empty victory when new contracts were signed retaining 12 men at the World. Charles Pincus, Paramount Publix district manager, had requested the band be reduced to 10 in face of a heavy overhead.

Rangval Olson, president of the Omaha Musicians' Association, lost the Orpheum Theatre contract to Edward Perrigo, Chicago violinist and recent member of the World orchestra. The Orpheum band of 12 pieces is introducing saxes for the first time.

Police Seeking Vandals Who Dynamited Theatre

Hamilton, Ont.—Police here are seeking vandals who dynamited the Queens, a non-union theatre. Force of the explosion blew a large hole through the rear wall, tore up the stage and filled the auditorium with debris. Wreckage covered all nearby structures.

St. Louis Unions Renew Fight for Wage Increases

St. Louis—The climax of the St. Louis music situation is expected to be reached Friday when the contracts of the Skouras theatres, including the St. Louis Amusement Co.'s neighborhood and various independent houses, with the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association will expire.

In the meantime the union is said to have renewed its efforts to reach new agreements with the various theatres.

Although their agreements with the union still have several days to run, the Skouras houses, including the Ambassador and Missouri in the first-run field, have not been using pit orchestras since Sept. 1. The musicians have been reporting for duty each day but have not been used. They were paid just the same.

The decision to dispense with the services of the musicians was made when the union failed to reach an understanding with the St. Louis and Fox theatres. The contracts of those houses ran out at midnight on Aug. 31. The union had demanded that the St. Louis change its status from a vaudeville house to a de luxe picture theatre and increase its orchestra from 12 to 20 men. This demand was rejected.

Under existing contracts with the Skouras Brothers, the musicians at the Ambassador theatre have been receiving $87.70 for 49 hours work and the Missouri musicians $76.20 for 42 hours weekly. It is said the musicians want an increase of $1 a week each.

The St. Louis Amusement Co. has been paying 32 musicians $48 a week each. The Granada theatre, the de luxe house of the St. Louis chain, has been using 15 musicians and the other 17 are used in the other theatres.

Some of the larger independent houses of the city used musicians prior to Aug. 31, but the majority have depended entirely on sound pictures with musical scores.

New Booth Ventilation Ordered in Wisconsin

Milwaukee—A hearing was held in the state offices in this city by the Wisconsin Industrial Commission regarding booth ventilation. The commission has issued new orders requiring changes in the ventilation booth of practically every theatre in the state. The hearing was for the purpose of ascertaining theatre owners' sentiment, which may or may not influence any slight changes in the ruling.

Sunday Shows Out, So Exhibitor Closes Shop

Forest City, Iowa—Because citizens here refused to sanction a liberal Sabbath, this town now is without a theatre. Claire Donahue, who has managed the theatre for the last year, resigned from the post to become assistant at the Cecil, Mason City, following defeat of Sunday shows by a 2 to 1 count at the special election, the second held here.

Socked Hard

Legitimate show business' worst year, due to talkers, business conditions and labor trouble, is reflected in annual report of Shubert Theatres and subsidiaries for the year ended June 30, which shows net of $69,203 operating profit, which with depreciation and interest charges is a net loss of $1,231,108. The previous fiscal year showed net of $1,076,376 after depreciation and taxes.

Miss. and Nebr., Scenes of Fight Over Chain Tax

Two pitched battles to test the federal and state constitutionality of chain store taxation are under way. In Mississippi, a three-judge statutory court, composed of Judges Foster, Cox and Holmes, has granted an interlocutory injunction restraining collection of the additional gross sales tax on chain stores. However, the tax of ¼ per cent upon chains of more than five stores continues. Chain theatres are included.

Opposing forces in Nebraska have waged such a bitter battle against the chain tax that Attorney General Sorenson, acting upon their informal complaints, has granted a hearing for Sept. 29.

J. C. Penney Co., which launched the Mississippi court action, contended the additional tax is discriminatory and in violation of both federal and state constitutions. The state tax commissioner will endeavor to have the injunction dissolved or else take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the U. S.

Hollywood—For killing Motley D. Flint, veteran banker who was prominent in motion picture financing, Fred D. Keaton is to be hanged at San Quentin penitentiary some time within the next 90 days. Keaton is said to have confessed that losses he suffered in Julian Petroleum stock led him to shoot the banker.

Musicians Locked In Three Montreal Houses; Want $85

Montreal — Musicians still are out at Loew's, the Imperial and the Palace, but the negotiations begun at Toronto for restoration of musicians may be extended to this city. Musicians at the three houses walked out on one hour's notice to the managers in sympathy with the orchestra of the Capitol, whose services had been discontinued at the end of August when demands for increase in wages and a 12 months' contract were presented.

Loew's and the Imperial, both combination houses, were forced to drop vaudeville starting with the week of September 14 and all houses continued with an exclusive talking picture bill, with prices reduced.

The trouble started when the musicians at the Capitol demanded $85 per week and no cancellation when arrangements were being made for the introduction of stage shows there, the previous scale being $61.90. A compromise offer of $70 for a 22-show week or $80 for 28 shows was rejected. The musicians claimed that an agreement for a board of arbitration to be appointed by the Federal government was ignored and that they were locked out. The four theatres are operated by Famous Players Canadian Corp.

Two Buildings Increase R-K-O Studio Facilities

Hollywood — As a step in its progress with a $6,000,000 expansion program, RKO Radio Pictures is completing construction of two new buildings at its Hollywood studio.

A two-story camera building has been erected at the south end of the lot at an approximate cost of $100,000, while another new building to house properties has been constructed at a cost of $50,000. The property building is 180 by 124 feet. The camera structure measures 44 by 175 feet.

Many innovations for camera housing are incorporated in the camera building. Dark rooms have been eliminated due to the increased size of sound cameras. Each camera will have a separate "parking" space with a centrally located room for loading film.

All "still" camera work will be cared for in this building, which also includes three modern talking-picture projection rooms. A portrait gallery and a modern laboratory for developing still negatives are also included in the building.

A unique feature of the property building is that it contains a room two stories high in which draperies may be hung full-length. It is to be a cold-storage compartment, this to prevent damage by moth and other causes.

Manager Changes Being Made in Comerford Chain

Scranton, Pa. — Important managerial changes are taking place among the theatres of the old Comerford chain, some sixty of which have this summer been acquired by Paramount Publix. George C. Walsh, general manager of the Comerford-Publix houses in Pennsylvania, announced that Fred C. Hermann, manager of the Capitol, Wilkes-Barre, under the old Comerford regime, has been made district manager of 15 theatres centering in Wilkes-Barre, Plymouth, Luzerne, Parsons, Kingston and Hazleton.

Customs Agents Destroy $8,000 Worth of Props

San Francisco—Costly scenery, furniture and properties of the stage production, "Candlelight," were ripped to shreds, split and burned under supervision of a U. S. customs agent at Santa Barbara.

Destruction of the set, valued at $8,000, was necessary to comply with a bonding agreement. The play's owners were permitted to import the scenery without paying $4,000 in duties on condition it be destroyed at termination of the run.

The customs permit expired after last night's performance and destruction of beautiful pictures, vases, lamps and furniture was begun. The scenery was ripped from the frames and the frames split and burned. Some of the furniture was taken to Los Angeles, where wreckers will complete the destructive work. Customs agents said they were satisfied. (They should be.)

Seattle Metropolitan Is Closed by Publix

Seattle—The Metropolitan, No. 2 Publix house in this city, closes its doors this week after several months of operation on a money-losing basis. The house has been under the Publix banner through an arrangement with Klaw & Erlanger, owners of the Metropolitan, which is in reality a theatre for legitimate stage shows, seating 1,100 on the main floor and balcony. It was taken over by Publix last season when that company played all Paramount, United Artists and First National releases. Now, however, with only the Paramount product under contract, the big Paramount theatre here will take care of all bookings, and a second theatre was deemed unnecessary by Northwest Division Manager Robert Blair.

Curfew for Pee Wees

New York is planning the regulation of runt golf courses, and an ordinance is being prepared which will specify the number of hours they will be permitted to operate. The move follows complaints that the courses are becoming a nuisance, due to late operation. An 11 P. M. closing hour is to be sought.

Curfew Against One Philly Course; Judge Okays 2nd

Philadelphia—One of the most drastic legal opinions against miniature golf exploitation in Philadelphia was handed down by Judge Howard A. Davis, Common Pleas Court No. 3, when 10 P. M. was fixed as the closing time for a midget course at Wayne Ave. and School Lane, in the Germantown district. Several residents of the neighborhood had complained of the late operation of the course and had taken legal action, resulting in Judge Davis' "curfew" order.

On the other hand, another proposed Germantown course was given a clear bill of health the next day by Presiding Judge Stern in Common Pleas Court No. 2, when he refused to grant an injunction to restrain the construction and operation of a course at East Walnut Lane, Wayne Ave. and East Price St., defining the proposition as a legitimate business venture.

The construction of the course was opposed by a number of residents and the St. Thomas Lutheran Church. In refusing an injunction, Judge Stern defined the legal rights of the opposing parties.

"In the opinion of the court," he stated, "the complainants have not made out a case for relief by injunction at this time. There was evidence presented to the effect that the operation of such a golf course might and probably would be attended by noise, the congregation of idlers, the glare of lights and the congestion of automobile traffic, all of which would probably be annoying and disconcerting to the neighbors.

"These miniature courses are a recent innovation in communal life, but from the extent to which they have been subject to observation, they would not appear to be productive of the evils anticipated by the complainants, at least to such degree as to justify the interference of equity.

"Of course, it is true that a property owner, especially in a fine suburban district, probably would not welcome a neighbor of this sort, but in the absence of zoning regulations, and having in mind that such a golf course is in itself a legitimate venture, it would seem that any resultant undesirable features are of a nature which must be borne by the property owner in the absence of any restrictions or easements on his neighbor's property. . . . If, in fact, it (the course) is conducted in such a manner to bring about noise and dangerous traffic conditions, an injunction may probably be granted to restrain such excess."

Miniature Golf Gets Lifesized Rochester Blow

Rochester, N. Y.—Miniature golf took a double blow here last week when the city council restricted its operation from dawn to midnight almost at the same time that the town board of Irondequoit, largest suburb, was slapping a $150 to $350 license fee on all courses in that municipality and adding a requirement of sufficient parking space to keep the streets clear.

The Rochester action had been expected. Complaints that neighborhood courses disturbed the nightly peace of sleepers presaged a ban on after-midnight operation. In Irondequoit, courses which opened before June 30 will be compelled to pay $150 for operation and all others $300.

Vice-Mayor Isaac Adler and Councilman Joseph Guzzetta of Rochester forecast possible alterations in the law to fit individual courses where no complaints have been received. Indoor courses were not brought into the discussion, but the same law holds for both.

Des Moines Theatre Has Indoor Minnie Adjoining

Des Moines—The Casino building houses the first indoor miniature golf course in this city, but the theatre is to have no direct business connection with the golf. Abe Frankel, who runs the Riverview Amusement Park in the summer, found the golf course a profitable feature at the park. His son, Harry Frankel, is introducing the indoor golf on the floor above the Casino, which is owned by Abe Frankel. The elevator to the golf links above may be taken right from the Casino lobby. There will be, however, no use of combination admittance tickets or direct co-operation between the two enterprises, says Frankel.

Pee Wees Beat "Blues"

Toronto—East York, Ont., has imposed an annual tax of $50 on corner lot golf links and has ordered them to close each night at midnight and all day Sunday. In Winnipeg, nine pill golf proprietors are conducting "contribution golf" on Sundays to beat the Lord's Day Act, players being invited to put some money on the "collection plate" before receiving a putter and ball.

Price Builds Dinky Links

Baltimore—A miniature golf course to cost approximately $10,000 is being built on North Charles St. by Arthur B. Price, coproprietor of the Aurora, residential house. A building on the property will be fitted up as a club house for patrons.

Sunday Fight Starts in Ill.

Carbondale, Ill.—Because miniature golf has been operating on Sunday without molestation, pro-theatre interests have launched a battle to repeal local "blue" laws. A petition has been circulated and is said to have the backing of several city council members.

Golfies Lacking In Sex Appeal, Say Exhibitors

Providence—Theatre men in this man's town seem to feel that miniature golf as a "theatrical" venture has the same attraction as collegiate wrestling. It is significant that both the Modern and Carlton theatres, which have been white elephants for some years to the Fay interests, have installed burlesque and prepared for stock instead of hanging out three golf balls.

Undoubtedly theatrical interests are behind some of the demi-tasse outfits here, but the investment is largely in the nature of an experiment and already patrons are tiring of the synthetic sport.

While exhibitors continue to feel that the phobia is a menace it seems so far removed from theatrical competition that no appreciable amount of sleep is lost. Edward M. Fay, who controls six houses in the downtown belt, is moving stock into the Carlton Sept. 29 and for years this theatre has been the acknowledged weak link in the chain.

There is talk of a few second-run houses going Bobby Jones, but suburban exhibitors say they will string along with Garbo, Oakie and Charley Ruggles. One manager chirps: "Pony golf is nifty but it lacks sex appeal."

Tom Thumbs in Penna. Come Under "Blue" Laws

Lewistown, Pa.—Pennsylvania's Sunday "blue" laws, passed in 1794, which ban picture shows and kindred amusements on Sundays, applies also to Tom Thumb golf courses, according to the stand taken by Sheriff Wilson White, of Mifflin County. The sheriff caused the arrest of George McKeen and Harry Taylor for running miniature golf at Lake Park, a suburb of Lewistown, and when taken before Justice of the Peace George F. Stackpole the men were fined $4 each and had to divide costs of $5.40. The sheriff had warned the golf course proprietors they would be arrested if they persisted in operating the courses, but they resumed operations after a shutdown for several Sundays.

Plans are being made to try to repeal the Sunday "blue" laws in the session of the Pennsylvania Legislature this winter.

Tom Thumbs Barred from Vancouver Residentials

Vancouver — Pee Wee golf links are taboo in all but commercial sections of this town, the city council having approved a measure regulating zoning of miniatures.

Swamped

San Mateo—Three applications for pee-wee golf courses were taken under advisement and nine others denied, when the city council found itself confronted with an even dozen applications. There now are two links in operation in this city of 5,000. A new ordinance provides annual license fee of $100.

2-Edged Sword

Toronto—Tabloid golf, acute here as elsewhere, has worried city fathers sick because they could not tax the corner lot impresarios. It now turns out, however, that though there is no provision for licensing them, failure to apply for the non-existent license, nevertheless, is an offense. Two have been pinched. Their cases have not yet been heard.

Tempest in Teapot Over Pee Wee Golf

Vancouver—Good golfers on the dinky links here are beginning to cause trouble. The Pee-Wee courses are open for business on Sunday, and enjoy a flourishing trade. Because of this, the proprietors of Happyland, an institution which provides numbers of queer mechanical devices for the entertainment of the whoopee-minded populace, opened up for business last Sunday, and did well.

Exhibitors who have been stewing in quiet fury over the alleged inroads made into business by the minnies, thought this a drop too much, and a veiled threat has gone forth to the effect if this situation continues, then they will open for business on Sunday, just on the general principle of adding to the gaiety of the nation.

As a result of all this, a charge of violating the Lord's Day act has been laid against a proprietor of a miniature golf course, with the case granted a week's remand.

W. M. McKay, city prosecutor, in the meantime has issued a warning that charges will be laid against all other pee-wee courses which remain open on the Sabbath. The present action is in the nature of a test case.

Films vs. Golf in Tough Tilt, with Films Winner

Providence—More and more miniature golf courses are springing up in this man's town, but just to prove that there is plenty of business for all, exhibitors in the downtown belt chalked up one of their biggest scores last week. There are plenty of people pounding the pellets about the demitasse courses, but apparently they also go to the movies.

Wray Lead in "Dirigible"

Hollywood—The feminine lead in "Dirigible," which Columbia is producing, will be taken by Fay Wray, who has been borrowed from Paramount for the occasion. Ralph Graves and Jack Holt have the leading roles and have just returned from Lakehurst, N. J., where they were on location. Columbia is planning to make this picture a special.

Fay to Resume Stock

Providence—Stock, closed for the month of August, will resume at the Carlton Theatre Sept. 29. Edward M. Fay, owner of the Fay string of film houses here, and James Thatcher are the sponsors.

Dope New Hazards For Milwaukee "Missing" Links

Milwaukee—This city is going to step right in and put a few hazards into the operation of midget golf courses that the owners haven't thought of, according to Leon M. Gurda, building inspector. Gurda has a few hazards up his sleeve, and chief of these is his proposal to incorporate into the zoning law a restriction preventing building of the peewee courses within 60 feet of any building used as a residence.

Another idea which residents will like and golf course owners will not is his proposal prohibiting any system of illumination which reflects light into windows of adjoining properties. Prohibition of operation after certain hours is still another "hazard" he would like to build into the courses. At the present time the zoning law permits operation of courses in industrial, commercial and local business, and light manufacturing areas, which include many spots with adjoining apartments which, under his ideas, would not be permissible sites for the courses.

Gurda's recommendations were accompanied by a detailed recitation of attempts to regulate the tiny courses in Tulsa, St. Louis, Los Angeles and New Orleans. The land commission is thinking it over.

Combination of Theatre And Minnie Goes Over

Baltimore—A miniature golf course was built by Charles E. Hicks and his son, William, proprietors of the Hampden theatre, Hampden, a suburb of Baltimore, near the playhouse and business has been good at the theatre as well as at the midget links.

Due to the Ideal being closed for two months for enlarging the Hampden had a very fine summer despite depression and daylight saving in Baltimore. Business on the small links has been good also, but is now falling off somewhat.

Midget Golf Making Inroads Abroad, Too

London—Although exhibitors in many British towns are worried over Tom Thumb competition, many theatre owners are understood to be planning courses of their own, near their theatres, in an effort to fight the competition.

Golf in Convent

Ottawa—Sisters of the Congregation de Notre Dame have opened a private miniature golf course in the garden of their local convent.

Charlotte Calm

Charlotte.—There has been no falling off of attendance due to the golf craze, managers here report. There are about a dozen courses. Early in the season the Carolina theatre considered an indoor course, but soon abandoned the idea.

Heat Returns to N. Y., Bringing Summer Grosses

With but three exceptions, Broadway took a severe trouncing at theatre box-office windows, where intakes were brought down to summer averages by terrific heat which New York managers believed had departed two weeks ago.

"Hell's Angels," at its twin Criterion-Gaiety runs, and "Abraham Lincoln" were the only attractions which held up to normal business. Fox Borrows Leila Hyams

Hollywood—Leila Hyams will go to Fox to play the lead opposite Edmund Lowe in "Shepper Newfounder," a golf story which has Tommy Clifford, youthful actor, in a leading role. Leo McCarey will direct the production. Miss Hyams was borrowed from M-G-M for the part.

Directors' Meeting

Hollywood—When asked by a fan paper reporter who was their favorite director, the majority of a group of 22 players thought it best to remain silent, because, as Barbara Kent puts it, "you never can tell which one will direct you next."

Their answers—many of which touched the ridiculous—follow:

The man who invented crackers and mustard and sweetless diets and made me what I am today.—Joan Crawford.

Dorothy Arzner, there's only one answer.—Ivan Lebedeff.

All of them are my favorite directors. You never can tell which one will direct you next.—Barbara Kent.

Cast my vote for Russell Mack. He never laughs at his own jokes.—Eddie Quillan.

The director of my bank, because he often allows me to be caught short.—Polly Moran.

I never play favorites in horses or directors. But Tay Garnett is a pretty good guy—or maybe I'm getting used to him.—William Boyd.

My mother, for she watches where the dollars go.—Sally Blane.

The guy who discovered the real use for the cutting room floor.—Robert Montgomery.

I am my favorite director, if you believe some of the things you hear.—Mary Nolan.

An uncle of mine who showed me how to eat grapefruit. He put on glasses. I copied him.—Harry Green.

An actress who names her favorite director has more courage than I. But I do like Joseph Santley.—Helen Twelvetrees.

Cecil B. DeMille, because he brings back memories of Saturday nights, and the old wash-tub.—William Haines.

Lewis Milestone. When you work with him in a war picture, you develop your physique as well as your technique.—Lewis Ayres.

Whoever is directing me. You know how it is.—Lupe Velez.

Noah Webster, because he uses the two syllable word "no."—Buster Keaton.

The box office, because it directs the directors.—Marie Dressler.

George M. Cohan, because he started the vogue for flag waving and Broadway melodies.—Bessie Love.

Von Stroheim, because the powers that be can't seem to like him either.—Charles Bickford.

Ernst Lubitsch. I've never worked for him. Well?—Ann Harding.

The ice man, because he keeps me cool.—Arthur Lake.

John Murray Anderson, while you are working with him, there's always good music.—Jeanette Loff.

Butterfield Improving Several Mich. Houses

Detroit—Improvement of a number of Butterfield circuit houses is under way. The remodeled Franklin at Saginaw has been reopened and in a few weeks the old Orpheum at Bay City will be reopened as the Bay. The old Colonial at Lansing has been remodeled and its name changed to the Lansing.

The new theatre at Iona is to be opened in January. Col. W. S. Butterfield and his general manager, E. C. Beatty, are to be in New York Oct. 8 to 14 on general business and will meet E. C. Russian Studio Ready Moscow—One of the world's largest studio plants, being built as part of the Soviet's widely touted five-year reconstruction plan, will be ready late this year. Started in 1928, original plans called for its completion in 1932, but work has been speeded to allow for opening two years earlier.

British Players to U. S.

London—Dorothy Seacombe and Eugenic Prescott, British players, are preparing to leave for Hollywood.

Shearer Breaks House Record On West Coast

Los Angeles—Aided generally by cooler weather, business perked up considerably in downtown Los Angeles houses and at Hollywood first runs, with miniature golf copping miniature grosses, and the majority of theatres taking in plenty, but not enough to pass par.

"What a Widow" knocked the row for a loop with its $30,000 gross, giving the United Artists a rating of 222%, which established summer high for this house.

At Loew's State, the $41,000 gross piled up by "Let Us Be Gay" broke the house record for all times, while a $26,000 gross clicked by Arliss' "Old English" gave the Hollywood Warner house plenty to talk about. The Newsreel dropped to 45% and folded, with a policy of revival showings adopted, beginning Monday when "The Birth" goes in for a run.

$12,000 Intake Puts "Holiday" Ahead in Balto

Baltimore—With twelve first-run and one big second run house going full blast, and numerous de luxe neighborhood theatres carrying excellent patronage, business is being divided here over the entire number with movie fans shopping more than ever for their film fare.

The outstanding success of the week was the gross of $12,000 piled up by "Holiday," at the Rivoli, giving a rating of 150%. This picture was "in the air" long before it reached Baltimore, news having been received through word of mouth communication that this was a picture worth seeing. The last day it was shown at the Rivoli, was one of the biggest in the history of the house.

Next in line for honors, was "Common Clay," in its third week at the New theatre, which piled up an estimated gross of $11,000, rating 110%. At Loew's Century, "Follow Thru," pulled 100% business with the gross of $18,500.

During its second week at the Little theatre (267 seats), "Silent Enemy," pulled excellently with a 100% business, gross being figured at $1,000.

A surprise was furnished by "Matrimonial Bed," at Warners' Metropolitan. Whereas this is a fast moving French comedy, it seemed to be somewhat too subtle for the majority. The percentage was figured at 40% making the gross about $2,400.

"The Sea God," took a nose dive at Loew's Stanley only doing about $13,125. This rates about 75%. Here is a good South Sea melodrama, ably handled and produced, which did not seem to click with the public.

Weather, clear and temperate to Friday, then cloudy and sticky. Opposition: "Kuddling Kuties," burlesque at the Gayety.

What Next?

Toledo—Local prize crack of the week was delivered by a hotel manager to an exhibitor friend who had been sobbing about the vest-pocket golf course menace.

The two met on the street near where a new filling station was under construction.

"What's that?" asked the theatre man by way of making conversation.

"More grief," said his friend. "'S a Tom Thumb hotel."

Labor Trouble Lowers Montreal Theatre Grosses

Montreal—Business eased off somewhat in Montreal during the week, while the strike of the musicians at the Loew's, Imperial and Palace theatres, September 11, two weeks after the Capitol theatre musicians were dismissed, undoubtedly affected patronage during the last few days. The Capitol had a more or less hectic week but managed to come through with $11,500 on "Let's Go Native." Morning matinees, a new Capitol venture, helped some. Best of the local week was the old standby, "Common Clay," at the Palace where it brought $15,500 for 100%. "Wild Company" was fairly steady at Loew's at $12,000. Second week of "Throw of the Dice," a British-India special, faded off at the Roxy for a 75% total, $2,500, for seven days. The weather was ideal for theatres with cool nights.

Exhibitors at Frisco Woozy Counting $$$$

San Francisco—The week was considered the best witnessed here for many months and practically the best of any on the Pacific Coast. The eleven first class houses all hit 100% or over.

The two leading runs were the second week of "Birth of a Nation" at the Geary and "Song of My Heart" with John McCormack at Loews-Warfield. The latter gross was $35,000 with a rating of 160% and "Birth" did better the second week than the first. It grossed $40,000 and rated 140%.

"Animal Crackers," shown at the St. Francis after playing at the California, another Publix theatre, stood out in front with a $11,200 gross and a 103% rating. The Casino which showed two first run pictures this week, the "Careless Age" and "Frozen Justice," grossed $10,000 and rated 100% with both of them. "The Sea God" at the Paramount rated $12,000 and grossed 102%. The California grossed $14,200 and rated 100% on "Top Speed."

Among the several reasons given for the good week, was good pictures and the celebration of "State's Admission Day," which was marked with parades in the morning.

Goldreyer Back in Business

Saugus, Mass.—The Dream has been renamed the Hollywood and has been purchased by Charles A. Goldreyer, formerly manager for Warners at the Capitol, Everett. This is the first ownership Goldreyer has acquired since selling a small chain of theatres in New York State to Publix a few years ago.

Police Handle Extras

Hollywood—There is plenty of pavement pounding these days along Gower St. and other local thoroughfares, take it from Casting Director Rex Bailey, who says there are about four extras for every job available. Police had to be called to handle the crowd when the notice was sent out for extras for "Cimarron."

Dollars Rolling, Managers Smiling At Minneapolis

Minneapolis—Another good week took the wrinkles out of the theatre managers' brows. A close check-up gave the houses a rating that either rimmed the 100% mark or hit the high 80's. Two houses—the Minnesota and the Century went over the 100% mark. The Minnesota showing "Anybody's Woman," and Horace Heidt and his band on the stage romping away from the rest of the field. The house grossed $23,000 to ring 103%.

The Century, pushing "Animal Crackers" with every publicity gag possible had their ballyhoo rewarded by a gross of $12,360. This is a rating of 105%, good for the second week that the Marx brothers' film was offered at this house. The Orpheum, playing "Dixiana," and Bomby and his Radio Gang as the featured stage act, collected $16,000. The rating here was 100%.

The State, despite a panning, took $14,000 on "Three Faces East." The house rated 80%. Ballyhoo was aided because William Courtney, who has a major role in the film, once appeared in stock here. The Lyric showed "Man From Blankley's," and the Barrymore film was a surprise. It clicked 100% on $3,000. By benefit of advertising that was suggestive to the nth degree the Aster gave "On Your Back," a good opening. The house was forced to change their advertising after the second day. The picture took $3,000 and a 100% rating.

Chi Loop Flops; "Dixiana" Is Low On $8,000 Take

Chicago — Most grosses were down all over the Loop with the run houses getting what little business was in circulation. The surprise of the week was the undistinguished business done by the Garbo picture, "Romance," at the Chicago. Its $47,500 gross is nice enough business for the house but little enough for a Garbo picture here. It is almost $18,000 under the figure chalked up here the preceding week by Chatterton's "Anybody's Woman."

"Dixiana" left the Woods after two disappointing weeks, getting only $8,000 (70%) in its final seven days. "Leathernecking" replaced. "The Spoilers" was off to only a fair start at McVickers with a take of $16,000 (90%) in its first four days of mid-week. "Anybody's Woman," playing a second Loop week at the Oriental after establishing a house record for the Chicago, turned in a nice $35,700 (85%). Others were ordinary, but in the money. Heat may explain some of the let-downs.

Fox Gets Another K. C. Suburban Theatre

Kansas City—Control of the Apollo, suburban house, for a 99-year period passed last week to the Midland Theatre & Realty Co., a Fox subsidiary. The new long-term lease will not bring about a change in the theatre management, as the Midland company held the theatre under a lease with about eight years to run. This was abrogated in negotiating the new 99-year lease with its relatively permanent control of the theatre and adjoining ground.

Business Up

Cleveland.—J. E. Fontaine, Paramount district manager, is looking forward to a big year in spite of the present business depression. Fontaine bases his prediction on the fact that sales in the Cleveland territory are now 38 per cent ahead of last year at this time.

Marx-Men Break Records, Knock 'Em Dead in K. C.

Kansas City—The Newman hit a new high for the year with "Animal Crackers," which shot up the gross to $23,500, rating 235%. Previous high for this house occurred three weeks ago with "Common Clay" which registered $500 under this week's intake. The Marx Brothers' show has been sent to the Royal for another week.

The Pantages had a good week with "Top Speed" and a good Fanchon & Marco stage show, "The Hollywood Collegians." The house took in $14,500, or 125% rating. "Outside the Law" brought the Mainstreet $16,500 rating 110%. Viola Dana and Benny Rubin in person helped to bring in the patrons.

"Song of My Heart" at the Royal hit the 110% mark, taking in $5,000. This picture would have done better in any other house in town. Acoustics are bad and the people know it.

The Uptown had an average week with "The Flirting Widow," taking in $6,000. The disappointment of the week was "The Bad One" which turned out to be a bad one for the Midland. Rating nosedived down to 85% or $10,625.

Flesh Shows at Toronto House Get Top Dough

Toronto—There was tremendous excitement in Toronto during the week, with the re-opening of the huge Imperial theatre, all re-fitted, under its new policy of Jack Arthur stage shows, new orchestra, ballet, master of ceremonies, stage band; pictures 'n' everything. "Anybody's Woman" was the screen feature. The Imperial hit is high mark of the year with $21,000 for six days which was worth 135%.

The Uptown, reduced to second runs and split weeks and lower prices, was only a shell of its former glory and scraped along with "Song O' My Heart" and "Love Among the Millionaires." Other main stem houses felt the effects of the run on the Imperial, and also the aftermath of the Canadian National Exhibition.

Comerford Gets Fay's Theatre at Rochester

Rochester, N. Y.—Fay's Theatre, downtown film house, jinxed by a fire which closed it down last January at a loss of $39,000, passed last week into the hands of the M. E. Comerford interests. It was announced shortly afterward that the 1,200-seat house will be reopened for straight sound films about Oct. 15.

Comerford now is engaged in installing new carpets, hangings and a ventilating system, ripping out the gallery and boxes and enlarging balcony and orchestra circle space, constructing an all-steel roof and renovating the house. The theater will reopen as the Capitol. Edward M. Fay of Providence, R. I., formerly operated the theatre.

McCormack Hits Par at One Run, Flops at Another

Ottawa—Playing both the Regent and Imperial theatres, "Song o' My Heart" registered good business, but was not the sensation expected—probably due to John McCormack's strong Irish leanings, which are not highly acceptable in the Canadian capital. "Song o' My Heart" hit 100% at the Regent with $5,200, which was considerably below "All Quiet" during a previous week. It made no better than 85% at the Imperial. William Haines and his "Way Out West" tickled the crowd at Keith's and scored $4,100, or 100%, for the three-day run. "The Bad One," Centre, was just below par, $3,200, or 95%, for six days. Portland, Ore.—Co-operating with the merchants and Chamber of Commerce, and particularly with the Portland Jewelers' Club, Fox's Broadway displayed during the entire week $1,000,000 worth of jewelry in a veritable pageant of gems. No less lustrous than the beautiful stones was the film and stage offering, bringing Milton Sills in "The Sea Wolf" and Fanchon & Marco's "Gems and Jams" and the new master of ceremony, Jim (Slim) Taft and Fox Broadway band. With fair and cooler weather and this array of talent the first fall show brought the gross to $15,100, rating 145%.

$21,900 on Marx Film Nears B. O. Record at Seattle

Seattle—This man's town went on a diet of "Animal Crackers" for the entire week. They were served at the Paramount, where a gross of $21,900 came within a few hundred dollars of the house record now held by "The Virginian." Rating about 180%, the film did the biggest business attained by any local theatre in many months.

Second in the week's running came "Last of the Duanes" at the Fox Fifth Avenue. A gross of $14,960 (110%) was acceptable, but somewhat below expectations for this season.

Other houses showed results that were merely average. Fox's Coliseum, still on its extended run policy at 50c top, got $4,-525 for a rating of 145% on "Call of the Flesh," which was pleasing. The Fox, on the other hand, took only $5,495 (55%) with the second week of "Good News," held over despite a rating of less than 100% the first week.

"Queen High" at the Metropolitan, "The Office Wife" at the Music Box and "Ladies Must Play" at the Blue Mouse all hovered around the 100% mark, and "The Office Wife" goes into a second week because of a slight delay in the arrival of "Moby Dick" as the next attraction.

Mayor Ignores Pleas For Sunday Shows

Cleveland—Although hundreds of residents of Cleveland Heights have voiced their preference for Sunday shows by letters to the Heights Press, which invited an open discussion of the Heights "blue" laws, Mayor Frank E. Cain and his councilmen declare they will continue to keep the two theatres on the Heights closed. Neither M. B. Horwitz, owner of the Heights theatre, nor Max Lefkowitz, owner of the Cedar-Lee, participated in the drive for open Sundays other than to run trailers asking for an expression of popular opinion. Only one protest against Sunday opening was received.

"Uncle!"

Hollywood—The latest in titles is "Aunts in the Pants," a short comedy which RKO will make. Walter Catlett has been signed to direct the two reeler.

"Crackers" Sends Cincy Crowds to Radio's Palace

Cincinnati—The name of R-K-O Palace might well have been changed to S-R-O Palace for the current week. Marx Bros. in "Animal Crackers," proved a continuous magnet for the fans, and the Palace was the hot-spot among the downtown houses. The gate for the week registered $25,600, with a rating of 183%. Ordinarily when a picture piles up a respectable gross on a local first-run showing it is booked for a second-run in one of the RKO smaller houses shortly after or immediately following the initial engagement. In this instance, however, the enormous gate justified a holdover for an additional seven days replacing Ruth Chatterton in "Anybody's Woman," which had originally been set in for next week.

The Albee, vaudefilm house where the grosses are steadily climbing skyward, rang up a gross of $27,200, which equals a rating of 124%. Screen feature at this house was Jack Oakie in "Let's Go Native." Oakie is a favorite here, and can always be depended on to click.

John Barrymore in "Moby Dick," at the Lyric, kicked in with a gross of an even $13,000, which means a rating of 109%. This is considered a good intake for this particular type of picture, as many of the regulars are not so hot when it comes to tense drama.

The Capitol with "Follow Through," rang up $15,600 as a gross, giving this week's business a rating of 120%, running very close to the takings of last week for "Anybody's War."

"Let Us Be Gay," second-run at the Strand, ran $6,000, equivalent to 172%, which is slightly ahead of last week. The Norma Shearer fans are legion here, and she is always a good draw.

Legit Openings Fail to Affect Boston Houses

Boston—"Hell's Angels" opened for a stay in Boston with a first week of $16,500, or a rating of 150%, and with indications pointing to a bigger second week than the opener. "Anybody's Woman," at the Metropolitan, boosted totals to $41,500 for a rating of 133%, which is the best week to date since late spring.

With the legitimate theatres reopening, a drop had been expected in grosses in the uptown districts, but more theatres are apparently bringing out more people, particularly as the vacation season comes to an end. The legitimates report business as "not so good," but the picture theatres say, "better than ever."

Loew's two theatres observed "Fall Opening Week" and came under the wire well ahead, with "Good News" bringing in $24,-000 for a rating of 120% at the State, and "Call of the Flesh" at $22,500 for a 115% rating at the Orpheum.

"Last of the Duanes" at the Scollay and Fenway netted 105% for $15,000 at the former. "Song o' My Heart," playing day and date at the Olympia and Uptown, hit 122% at each, which is unusual, for a total of $33,000. Weather was fair and cool.

Publix Sells Lowell House to Independent

Boston—In keeping with the plan to turn back some of the chain theatres to independents, Publix has sold the Rialto at Lowell to Charles Williams.

Other changes in the territory include the purchase of the Capitol in Arlington, and the Ball Square and Capitol in Somerville, by Julius Johnson from Al Locatelli. S. Rudnick has sold the Humboldt, Roxbury, to the Sanford Theatre Corp. The Amherst, at Amherst, Mass., has been sold by P. J. Lawler to Publix. The three Town Halls, Ashland, Hopkinton and Holliston, Mass., have been taken over by Martin Golden.

Strike in Philly Affects Receipts; 'Moby Dick' High

Philadelphia—Business in Philly was consistently good in the week "B. S." (before strike). Since the movie week for most weekly change theatres starts on Friday here, the effect of the musicians' walk-out of Thursday midnight, has not shown up yet on the balance sheet.

From observation of the three houses affected on Friday and Saturday, the Mastbaum, Fox and Earle, it would seem that the first two named did good average business while the latter slumped somewhat.

For the regular week, however, "Three Faces East" pulled $45,000 into the Mastbaum, at least $5,000 over summer average, while the Boyd grossed $25,000 with Barrymore's "Moby Dick," high rating of 130%.

"Song O' My Heart," the McCormack picture, shaved a bit under the usual Fox average, but "The Big House" held up to $9,000 or a 90% rating for its eighth week. It was the first week during the run that the film didn't gross over average business. It is now playing its ninth and last week.

"Unguarded Girls," the sex picture at the Chestnut, a legit house, jumped back to $11,000 for its third week. It was the first of the "men only" weeks and the boys were steady customers.

$10,800 on 'Clay' Gives Paramount, Omaha, Top Spot

Omaha—There's no doubt about it, good pictures get the money. Paramount had a second hooper-dooper week when "Common Clay" mounted to 135% for $10,800. "Animal Crackers" moved to the State for htree days after a week at the other house and hit 125%. That's $2,625 and big for the State.

"Outside the Law" was rapped by unsympathetic reviewers but, nevertheless, was a clever enough crook picture to bring the Orpheum $15,000, just 100%. Sylvia Clark was the stage draw.

World slipped to 95% with "Last of the Duanes," doing $9,025. "Golden Dawn" last half at the State, flopped at $1,687, barely 75%. Weather was swell.

Cost of Sound Is Retarding Talker Growth in Austria

Washington—Unless the price of sound reproducers is reduced, the development of talkers will be retarded in Austria. The saturation point has already been reached in that market for high-priced equipment, according to the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce in its survey of the Continental field.

The trade in Hungary anticipates sound will grasp rapid hold there, although few of the 524 theatres there have been wired. Lack of capital and the limited potentialities of the field are two hurdles which the industry will have to jump before the talker development can get anywhere.

In detail, the Government reports on these two countries follow:

AUSTRIA

BY JOHN A. EMBRY
American Commercial Attache, Vienna

The salient feature of Austrian situation during 1929 was the rapid conversion of silent cinemas into sound cinemas. During the year 23 in Austria were wired for sound films, of which 15 employed American equipment. According to the trade, the saturation point for sound equipment has already about been reached unless the price of sound equipment can be considerably reduced. Prospects for additional orders are said to be very poor with prices at their present level. Below is given a list of the cinemas in Austria which were equipped with sound apparatus during 1929, their location, seating capacity, and the type of equipment used.

Features Produced

There were no new cinemas constructed in Austria during 1929, and according to trade estimates, the total seating capacity has remained unchanged.

Nineteen feature films were produced in Austria during the year at a total cost of about 2,100,000 schillings ($300,000), which makes the average cost per film about $15,800. All were silent. Austria is not yet in a position to produce sound films for commercial purposes, and it is extremely doubtful if it will ever become a competitor in that line. There is only one studio in Vienna equipped to produce sound films (Selenophon), and that studio has not entered upon production of either sound shorts or features.

The feature films made in Austria during 1929 were produced generally by persons more interested in the import permits received for their films than in the commercial possibilities of the film itself. It is not believed that the pictures produced possess sufficient merit to give them an appreciable market outside of Austria.

In addition to the 19 feature films produced in Austria during 1929, there were also produced 160 shorts.

The United States continued, during 1929, to supply the bulk of the feature films and shorts imported into Austria, as will be seen from the following table. Of the total number of feature films imported during 1929, 15 were sound films, of which 14 came from the United States and one from Germany. Silent versions did not accompany these films, but will probably be brought in later.

Sound films have been well received in Austria, and most cinemas showing them have packed houses. In view of their extremely recent appearance in Austria, it is not possible to judge whether the novelty is contributing largely to that popularity. Practically every cinema in Austria of adequate size either is already wired for sound films or has contracted for such wiring in the near future. Some of the cinemas already wired have such a small seating capacity that it is difficult to see how they can prove a financial success. The need of larger and better ventilated cinemas in Austria has long been felt, but there is little prospect of the situation improving in the near future because of existing unfavorable legislation regarding motion picture concessions.

Austrian production plans for 1930 are very vague, and the production situation will doubtless undergo little change.

The number of film import permits issued in 1929 for each approved film produced in Austria during 1929 was 22. By a regulation of the Ministry of Commerce, published recently, the issuance of film import permits up to August 31, 1930, will be as follows:

	Licenses
Approved Austrian silent films produced during January, 1930	21
From Feb. 1 to Aug. 31, 1930
Entirely Austrian-made silent films costing at least 60,000 schillings	13
Films produced wholly or in part in Austria on the production of which at least—
Seventy thousand schillings was spent in Austria	15
Eighty thousand schillings was spent in Austria	17
Ninety thousand schillings was spent in Austria	19
One hundred thousand schillings was spent in Austria	21
Sound films produced entirely within Austria shall receive a bonus in excess of the above schedule of	10

For the application of the last clause, sound films are defined as follows: "By sound films is meant those films whose accompanying music, noises, song, or speech is recorded on the film ribbon or on records in such a manner that by mechanical means they can be synchronously reproduced."

The above regulations apply only until Aug. 31, 1930, at which time the whole question of artificial trade restrictions will be revised in accordance with the Geneva Convention of 1928.

Hollywood—"Hmm," hmmed an important director; "I see that the exhibitors are taking us for a sleigh ride. On my first picture a lot of boys paid $70, on the second, $50, and on the third, $40. At this rate, if I make four more pictures we'll be out of business."

524 Theatres in Hungary; None Built in 1929

HUNGARY

BY WALTER M. SLAVIK
Assistant Trade Commissioner, Budapest

No new picture theatres were built in Hungary during 1929; the number of cinemas, therefore, remained at 524 and seats at 180,049.

Enlargement by 600 of the seating capacity, of the Urania, Budapest, was started in 1929. Two weeks before its expected opening it was severely damaged by fire, necessitating its entire reconstruction. No other reconstruction is reported in 1929.

The following cinemas were equipped with sound apparatus in 1929:

Theatre	Location	Seating Capacity	Apparatus
Forum	Budapest	780	American
Royal Apolio	Budapest	1,010	American
Decsi	Budapest	651	American
Capitol	Budapest	624	American
Jozsefvarosi	Budapest	650	American

Imperial	Budapest	564	Edibell [1]
Omnia	Budapest	585	Edibell [1]
Omnia	Budapest	585	Gerard [1]
Orion	Budapest	320	Gerard [1]

[1] The two theatres have the one apparatus in common, alternating its use.

In January, 1930, sound apparatus was installed in the Pfulumm, seating capacity 1,200, in Pesterzsebet, a suburb of Budapest. Sound apparatus was planned for 1930 by seven other theatres, with a combined seating capacity of 3,782.

The Corvin, the largest theatre in Budapest (capacity, 1,217), also plans installation of Klangfilm apparatus very shortly. The Urania had planned a similar installation before its burning. Plans for reconstruction and sound installation are now entirely unsettled.

The following feature films were started in Hungary in 1929: "Kossuth, or Spring in the Storm" (Tavasz a Viharban); "A Bird in a Cage" (Rabmadar); "There Is Just One Girl in the World" (Csah egy hislany van a vilagon); and "Eternal Love" (Orok szerelem). These films, all of which were silent, cost an estimated total of 390,000 pengos ($68,250), an average of about 100,000 pengos ($17,500).

"Kossuth" was produced by Steinhard-Sze-

AUX armes, citoyens! The foundations of society are threatened again, but the gods be praised, the Hollywood Technical Directors' Institute stands between us and destruction. Major Frank Pease, president of the institute (at the moment we have no means of knowing whether there are any other members), has sent the following telegram to, among others, the President of the United States, the Attorney General, the Secretaries of War and the Navy, of Commerce and the Treasury, the Governors of all our States, and to foreign governments, "especially to their military offices"—also to the heads of national organizations and editors:

"May we solicit your great influence to help prohibit further showing without drastic censoring and revision of Universal's film, 'All Quiet on the West Front?' This is the most brazen propaganda film ever made in America. It undermines beliefs in the army and in authority. Moscow itself could not have produced a more subversive film. Its continued uncensored exhibition especially before juveniles will go far to raise a race of yellow-streak slackers and disloyalists. Domestic statecraft, common sense and plain every-day patriotism demand instant suppression of such vicious propaganda. It is important to act promptly. Accept, please, our every respect and thanks."

Major Pease, not sure that he has made his point clear, supplements this wire by a circular which we have been fortunate enough to receive. He recommends this "vile film" to every one's "active hostility and deepest scorn." "Its evil aim," he finds, "is straight upon the military establishments of the whole civilized world. Its powers for subversive damage transcend all national boundaries." He finds that it is even "against the established order and the status quo." Worse, Mr. Lasky has imported "a sadist and monster" by the name of Eisenstein, and Major Pease, speaking with great moderation, is "a trifle aghast" (why only a trifle?) that the "rubber gates of Ellis Island were allowed to stretch wide enough to admit this vermin."

Even more interesting, perhaps, are the thoroughly admirable methods Major Pease's Hollywood Technical Directors' Institute has elaborated of passing on the merits of the talkies. We regret that we cannot reproduce here a photostatic copy of the Technical Release Report. The document, appropriately colored blue, looks at first glance like a three months' laundry bill, running by actual measurement 2 feet 5¾ inches from top to bottom. It rates each picture for 34 qualities and 171 subqualities. There are five grades: excellent, good, fair, poor and bad. "All Quiet" has a hole punched under bad in respect of scenario direction, diction, dialect, plausibility of plot, of situations, of characterizations, of backgrounds, of dramatic logic, interpretation of death treatment of blasphemy and the Ten Commandments, marriage, civilized conventions of sex, and the double-entente. We regret to inform our readers, also, that the references to heads of governments are marked bad; the picture is unfit morally, seems also to violate military etiquette, and does not even reach as high as poor on one quality. When Major Pease sees thousands of people crowding to see it, what must be think of human nature?—The Nation.

Is That Nice, Charlie?

Albert DeMond did such fine work in writing dialogue for "Cohens and the Kellys in Scotland" that he was made an associate producer with Universal. He met Charlie Murray on the lot and told him the good news.

"Well, I'll be darned!" grinned Murray. "You know, Al, I never even suspected you were a relation."

—Screen Play

"I PRESUME the debate over the question, 'Which is the more alluring, the blonde or the brunette?' will continue till Gabriel blows his horn and the world calls it a day. Then as the cavalcade heads toward the bar of judgment some fellow from Hoboken who admires brunettes will meet some man from Wichita who likes blondes and they will argue till the curtain falls. Men are like that.

"In my work as a motion picture producer I have employed many beautiful young women. I found Mae Murray playing in the Follies and brought her to Hollywood. I saw Fanny Ward in an elevator and offered her her first contract in pictures. I discovered Eleanor Boardman playing in stock around New York, and I met Frances Howard, whom I married, in Gotham. All were blondes.

"In more recent years I placed Vilma Banky, Belle Bennett, Constance Howard, Lily Damita, Evelyn Laye, Joan Bennett, Frances Dayde and Eleanor Hunt under contract—all blondes save Miss Hunt, who has red hair, but is of the blonde type.

"'Why,' I am asked 'do you lean toward blonde beauty?"

"I think I have done so unwittingly. And this, I believe, is the answer to the question. A blonde strikes you as being an effeminate creature, a more delicate and appealing creature than a brunette—a fragile, dainty creature commanding the strength and protection of men. Her very coloring suggests the feminine. The vision of her will remain longer in the memory than the vision of the stronger-bodied, darker girl. There is a softness about her which will bring thoughts of pictures in pastel.

"I choose blonds (strangely, it seems) because they were more 'showy!'

The occasional blast from the militant ecclesiastic, against the picture industry, reminds us of the battle of Don Quixote against the windmill. Such attacks, based as they usually are on malice and ignorance, are just as effective as the charge of the ancient Spanish adventurer when on a broken steed and with a bent sword he sought to whip the windmill. —M. P. Record, Seattle.

LITA GRAY CHAPLIN, on her recent visit abroad, proved quite a problem to her unofficial press-agent, a kindly young man who was and is more concerned with the welfare of the snooty Hotel George V in Paris where Lita was stopping with her mother. The ex-Mrs. Chaplin, at first, seemed blind to the fact that the sole interest manifested in her by the French and English press in Paris was because she was one of the ex-Mrs. Charlie Chaplins, for Charlot—as he is simply called among the French fans—is a huge favorite over there. So, instead of talking about that, Lita went into a press-agenty blurb about herself and Broadway and the like.

The French scribes gave up and when the p. a. saw nothing in type save a few kidding stories, he again fixed rendezvous anew with the interviewers and coached up Lita a bit. This time, Lita overdid things and gave out reams of copy about herself and Chaplin and the possibilities of a future reunion. That was all the newspaper boys needed and it was wildly front-paged only to be flatly denied by Charlot in America who, in the meantime, had been interviewed by the news syndicates.

That meant fixing things all over again for Lita and her p. a. until she said simply that she was over here concerning some vaudeville bookings and that's all there was to that.—Screen Play Secrets.

The short story about the chorus girl who changed her name to something exotic but unpronounceable and thus became a film star is probably appearing in six of your favorite magazines this month. It's a pretty dull month when it doesn't appear in five. The story is always good for a heart-throb, even in the grisly bosoms of people who don't believe it could happen.

The gossips report frequent successful perpetrations of the hoax, and whisper the names of some of the more luminous of the new stars as being noms-de-cine for various sprightly gals who vital-statistically are Flanagans and Feitelbaums. The truth of these assertions is, of course, to be assayed tongue-in-cheek, since even the successful mouse-trap maker has a path worn by people who wish to throw a rock through his front window.

The tales have gone far enough, however, to justify the establishment by the Hays office of a cinemigration department, with offices in principal European cities, the function of which would be to examine prospective stars as to age, nationality, ideals, etc., and incidentally, in the grammar and idiom of their putative native tongue.—Cinema, New York.

that — Quips Lifted and Sifted

SOME of the Broadway boys discover, on arriving in Hollywood, that they are not so brilliant. Let us cite the case of a certain press agent who left this town to show the movie colony a thing or two.

This former press agent was being piloted about the Metro-Goldwyn movie lot. Foreign versions are now being made of almost every film. German, French and Italian companies are engaged and sit around until the English company finishes a scene. Then they go out and do their stuff. This press agent observed this and asked if they could use the same set for all versions, or did they build new ones.

The poor guy is still being kidded because of this remark.—N. Y. News.

After watching the talkie revolution become an evolution and finally take on many of the earmarks of a devolution, Jesse Lasky, one of the old-timers who tries to keep abreast of what's going on in the world, tells me he thinks the principal need of the motion picture business is young, fresh and energetic brains.

The old school type of dramatists is fading out rapidly, Lasky believes. Soon there will not be any more of them and in their places the movie industry will breed an entirely new type of dramatic writer whose ears are attuned to the argot and the clamor of the street.—Muir in N. Y. News.

One of His Kind

Atlanta — Popular figure in the Southeast is Bob Wilby. Everybody in this neck of the woods speaks well of this chap.

He is incidentally and perhaps the only exhibitor in the land whose right hand is affiliated and his left hand independent. The right side—physically—not necessarily—finds him operating the Publix-Saenger theatres in 11 North Carolina towns. The left side, tied in with other partners but no producer affiliation, has him running houses in four Alabama towns.

If Wilby ever goes in for hand waving, imagine the result.

IN the period before she became a very successful movie star, her husband and she were estranged. But he came back with her screen popularity and there are those in Hollywood who say that her success went not only to her head, but to his heart as well.

She was about through in her career, couldn't get a decent role on the stage and, when she went to Hollywood, it was on a last chance. She came through wonderfully. Her voice is magnetic and the cameras catch her talents which the footlights lost. He has always been a movie actor, but they lived apart during the first months of her West Coast residence.

It's sad but true that after her first good press notices he sent her flowers, and after her first big contract he moved into her house and has been there ever since. He is completely overshadowed now by her flicker importance, but he always manages to get fairly good leads and he seems quite domesticated under the luxurious new scheme of things which his wife's big salary makes possible.

The actress is a very intelligent, charming, educated woman who could have all the admirers she chose in California. She must know that her bank book was a magnetizing influence in his return, but she seems happy enough to overlook that little matter and talk vaguely of their little misunderstandings in the past and of their forced separations because of their careers. That also is Hollywood love.—Graphic, N. Y.

POET'S CORNER

A Hollywood girl who would star
Couldn't act, but deemed it no bar;
She climbed to success
By means of a dress,
That the censors mistook for a scar.
—Los Angeles Record.

THE fact that Warner Brothers in America recently appealed to newspaper men to submit stories to their scenario department, suggests that Warners, like other companies, are feeling the pinch of poverty in story material. It is a problem which has to be faced the world over, and indeed was foreseen in the early days. There are not enough playwrights to supply a play a week, and producers can not go on indefinitely using second-hand drama.

There is no new plot probably in the world—but there are new angles of treatment, and the success of every play depends not so much upon the first idea, as the manner in which it is handled. Realization of this simple fact would probably rob the future of its terrors as regards suitable talkie material. Film executives have an unfortunate habit of approaching scenarios with a preconceived idea of what they should contain, and when it differs from that conception, drastically twisting it into what they call "shape."

This barrier to new ideas in an original form was very stout in the silent days, but it is to be hoped that the wider horizon of the talkies will also widen the minds of the producers. Not only newspaper men, but many quite ordinary mortals (!) have stories to tell, and the younger school of writers generally have a method of their own in expressing their ideas. True, much of this method is tinged with cynicism, but even cynicism can prove commercially successful, as earlier Menjou films showed on numerous occasions.

There may not be a great number of "new" ideas, but there are a great many ways of treating the old ones, and if authors and producers can be brought to a working agreement, this will find substance in actual production. It seems certain that the successful future of the talkies will demand a much closer co-operation between the writer and the producer, and a much more open mind in the executive chair. It is not necessary to discover a theme that has never been dealt with before—an impossible task—but a mind that has something new to contribute in regard to one of the old ones. There is no shortage of mind power if the industry will encourage it; and when it does—the pinch of poverty in regard to story material will have been relieved once and for all.—Film Renter, London.

Hollywood free-lance actors have fallen on evil days; this because talking pictures are made so quickly. I know an actor who waited weeks to get a part from which he expected about a two months' engagement. The engagement lasted half a day.

On the other hand, the talkies are finding the going very tough. The reaction from the novelty of the thing has come—as should have been expected.

Even the producers themselves admit that the trouble lies in the fact that they just aren't interesting enough. To my mind the only failure in America is the amusement world. About every phase of life in a place life California is entertaining except the entertainments.

Why is it that no creative brain has thus far been able to give us the serene enjoyment of—say, an old mission? The little grave of the Spanish girl who was "The Rose of the Rancho" in the dim shadows of San Juan Bautista has more romance and interest and melancholy dreams than has the play of which she was made the heroine.—Carr in Los Angeles Times.

• Stop Us If We're Wrong •

OUR plaintive query last week, "Why doesn't M-G-M tie up with Columbia University on its football song, 'Roar, Lion, Roar,'" got a quick comeback from Si Seadler, who retorts: "Come on over some day and we'll sing you the verse Howard Dietz and I wrote to that tune a couple of years ago. The sentiments still hold true. Here's the ditty:

"Roar, Lion, roar,
And sing the praise that's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's.
We never stop,
We're on the top;
Licked them all from ——* to ——*.
We've got the stars,
We've got the hits,
First, last and always showmen.
Roar, Lion, roar.
For we're for M-G-M forevermore."
*Names on request.

Now all Si has got to do is to induce the Columbia students to sing the lyric at the games. . . . It seems to us that there is a chance for a Columbia Pictures tie-up also. . . . But both would have to root for the same team. . . . We're requesting those names from Si now and will (perhaps) publish them in our next issue.

After girdling the globe for many years, Burton Holmes has decided to settle down in Hollywood and has purchased a home there. That'll be gravy for the realtors' ad men. . . The executives are hoping that he's the only thing that will burn, says Sam Warshawsky, who is a humorist.

Detroit—Col. W. S. Butterfield has found a solution to theatres playing in the red, and is turning his Gull Lake theatre into a turkey house. He claims a world record low gross for the theatre, playing a matinee two summers ago to one 10-cent paid admission, and the manager decided it was better to take the dime than to darken the house. The colonel expects to recoup his heavy losses by raising turkeys.

P. S. Gull Lake is Col. Butterfield's summer home and the theatre was built as a plaything for his children.

Nize Baby

Chicago—Top this one if you can for the height of something or other. It was used by Warners' Avalon here in newspaper copy for "Little Accident":

An "Adults Only" tag was included on a safety pin.

DEWEY BLOOM is back in town. . . . A fine holiday in Canada effaced all signs of his recent illness and supplied him with an abundance of pep and a few gags: Mr. X (meaning exhibitor) had just previewed "Common Clay" and asked an auditor what he thought of the melodrammer. "It will get the hoi polloi," was the answer. "Maybe," replied Mr. X, "but I don't know vy they should razz that picture!" . . . Tiffany's effective penny advertisement for "Extravagance" arrived at this moment and Dewey opined a postscript should be added to it, stating that it was not a plug for Griffith's "Abraham Lincoln." . . . (Why didn't Al Selig arrange with the mint to have Owen Moore's smiling face on the pennies?) . . . The admiral epigrammed that "yes men are seldom in the know" before departing.

Cliff (Ukulele Ike) Edwards will make a splash at the New York Capitol next week, appearing both in a stage show and in Buster Keaton's "Doughboys."

Bill McCaffery won the RKO fall golf tournament by defeating James H. Turner. In the second flight President Hiram S. Brown beat Harry Mosley and Turner won the qualifying round from Harold Kemp. Lynn Farnol, general publicity counselor for Samuel Goldwyn, sends in a story about "the decorative battalion in 'Whoopee'." That's ritz for chorus girls. . . . Awe, go on.

Lasky is in town for conferences on production in the New York studios.

Gloria Switching

Hollywood—Gloria Swanson has two more to make under her United Artists' agreement before she can go with M-G-M. From all reports Miss Swanson will be under the M-G-M banner as soon as the two are finished.

Tay Garnett will probably direct Miss Swanson in her next picture. The director is assembling his staff preparatory to such an arrangement. At a preview of Pathe's "Her Man," Miss Swanson voiced approval of Garnett's direction and chances are he will go through with the picture.

THE

By John F. Rider

AS a sort of a review let us repeat a few pertment facts contained in lessons 15 and 16. When a condenser is connected to a course of D.C. potential a flow of charges must take place before the voltage across the condenser reaches its final value; the value of the charging voltage. Any variation in the value of the charging voltage causes a variation in the flow of charges or the charging current. When an inductance is connected to a source of D.C. a certain period elapses before the current through the choke reaches its final value as determined by the resistance of the choke. Any variation in the voltage applied causes a change in the current through the choke but the change in current is not instantaneous.

The subject matter considered thus far and relating to D.C. circuits has been more of the elementary or primary nature. Now we shall enter upon units employed in A.C. circuits and A.C. circuits in general. This material is somewhat more advanced than that which has preceded it. We suggest reference to the lesson devoted to the generation and calculation of an A.C. wave of voltage and current. Such a review will undoubtedly prove of aid.

RESISTANCE IN AN A.C. CIRCUIT.—We made mention some time ago that equipment used in A. C. circuits that are operated with alternating current flowing through the units, do not always perform in the manner experienced when the same devices are subject to D.C. potentials and direct current. We made further mention to the effect that current determination by means of Ohm's law is not necessarily the same in A.C. circuits as in D.C. circuits, but that at certain times a similarity is evident. Suppose that we start with an ordinary resistance employed with A.C. potential, so that alternating current flows through the resistance. Accordingly we shall consider the circuit shown in Figure 60A, a resistance R connected across a source of alternating voltage E of sin wave form and let us say of 2 cycle frequency. We select this frequency because it is of such value that the current variations are visible to a naked eye when a current meter is placed into the circuit. Naturally such low frequencies are not encountered in practice, but it is possible to explain reactions much better when the reader can visualize the current and voltage variations in the circuit. As to action, whatever is decided upon with 2 cycle supply is equally applicable with power supply of higher frequency or of voltage supply of higher frequency than is usually employed in power circuits. Just what we mean shall become evident as we progress.

Keeping in mind the statement made in the last paragraph that if the frequency of the supply voltage is low enough it is possible to note the rise and fall of the current in the system we can proceed to the actual experiment. (We might mention at this time that current reversal does not necessitate a current indicating meter which is of such design that the meter pointer can move in two directions from the point of rest. Just why a single direction meter is suitable will be explained when we reach the discussion of current indicating instruments.)

If we arrange a voltmeter across the resistance R and another across the source of voltage E so that the voltage across these two points may be observed and we keep simultaneous watch of the current meter in the circuit, we would note that the current and voltage in the circuit vary simultaneously. Expressed in another manner, any variation in voltage applied and across the resistance is accompanied by a corresponding current variation in that circuit. Not that the magnitude of current and voltage variation is the same, but that the current increases as the applied voltage increases and that the points of maximum current and voltage coincide. Such a state is shown in Figure 60B. The single cycle is separated into two alternations illustrating the variation of current and voltage. The current and voltage pass through their respective related points at the same time. At any one instant, the current in the circuit is proportional to the voltage and maintains that same proportion throughout the cycle. In other words the current and voltage are IN PHASE. By being in phase, we mean that they move in step with each other, that they vary simultaneously and with the zero point as reference, pass through their zero points of the cycle at the same instant.

Now we cannot fail to mention that a certain condition must be fulfilled in order that the above relation be true. The circuit must be purely resistance and be free of capacity or inductance, i.e., be non-capacitative and non-inductive. To be non-capacitative the charging current must be so small as to be entirely negligible. While all circuits have capacity, that existent between the leads (conductors) themselves, the capacity of the conductors in such circuits is generall so small that the value of the charging current around the capacity between the leads is so small in contrast to the normal current as to be totally negligible. This same circuit must also be non-inductive, which means that the magnetic field surrounding the conductor and the resistance must be so small that the induced emf produced by the flux lines of the field is negligible in comparison with the voltage required to overcome the resistance R. Such circuits are the filament circuits of amplifying systems, where the resistance is the tube filament and the remainder of the system (conductors) is classed as non-inductive and non-capacitative.

In as much as the current in the circuit is at every instant proportional to the voltage, the relation governing resistance, current and voltage in such resistive A.C. circuits is identical to that employed when the source of potential is D.C. and D.C. current flows through the resistance. Therefore Ohm's law as applied to D.C. circuits is applicable in its entirety to A.C. circuit containing only resistance. This law is applicable no matter how many such resistances are used and the normal manner of determining the effective value of series and parallel resistance is exactly as in ordinary D.C. circuits. Suppose that E in figure 60A is 100 volts and I is 10 amperes. These are effective values as indicated upon the meters. According to Ohm's law as applied to D.C. circuits the resistance is 10 ohms. No difference is introduced if the current and voltage are calculated with peak values. In the case mentioned, the voltage then is 141.4 volts and the current is 14.14, making a resistance of 10 ohms.

POWER IN A.C. CIRCUIT WITH RESISTANCE ONLY.—Just as the ordinary method of determining resistance in a D.C. circuit is applicable to the A. C. circuit containing only resistance, power calculation in such circuits is exactly as in D.C. systems. In other words I^2R governs the power aross the resistance, when I is in effective values, and

$P = E \times I = I^2R$ watts

(for an explanation of the power in the circuit we refer to the lesson devoted to the generation of a wave of A.C. voltage and current.) However, it might be well to state at this time that the heat developed in a resistance which represents the conversion of the Kinetic energy possessed by the electron in motion through the resistance into heat is independent of the direction of current flow, hence, while it is true that the power in such a circuit is not constant but varies from zero to maximum twice during each cycle, it is always positive and power is being consumed and never returned to the circuit.

Now, if we consider the current and voltage curves in figure 60B as separate entities, although they are related to each other, and consider their variation with respect to time, we note that there is no difference in their angular variation; that there is no angular displacement between the current and voltage. Such is the condition when two waves are in phase and the phase angle $\theta = 0$ degrees. The true expression for power is and since $\cos \theta = \cos 0^\circ = 1$, the power expended in the circuit is that equal to EI. (Cosines, sines and tangents are functions of angles and tables of such values are to be found in all text books on mathematics. The first three letters in each term are employed as the abbreviation designating that term, viz; "cos" means cosine; "sin" means sine and "tan" means tangent.)

FUNCTION OF RESISTANCE IN A.C. CIRCUIT.—Suppose that we have a tube filament rated at 5 volts and 2 amperes. This tube is to be operated from an A.C. source of potential rated at 7 volts and 2 amperes. (The type of A.C. source is of no consequence at this time and the significance of the 2 ampere rating of the source will be dealt with later.) In order to operate this tube filament from this source of potential, we must drop 2 volts. The resistance may be used for this purpose. According to values used, the drop of 2 volts must take place at a current flow of 2 amperes. The

$$R = \frac{E - E'}{I}$$

where E is the available voltage and E' is the required voltage at the tube filament. Hence capable of passing two amperes. The wattage rating of this resistance is either $I^2R = 4 \times 1 = 4$ watts or $EI = 2 \times 2 = 4$ watts.

$$R = \frac{7 - 5}{2}$$

Such a resistance need not be made up of one unit. Two, three or more resistances may be employed in series aggregating the required value. Likewise more than one resistance may be connected in series, parallel or series-parallel to constitute the required resistance.

CAPACITY IN AN A.C. CIRCUIT.—Suppose that we replace the resistance with a capacity, a fixed condenser as in figure 61. The voltage E is again of alternating character, a sine wave of such low frequency that it is possible to note the rise and fall of the current. Let us further imagine that we have a voltmeter connected across the source of voltage and another across the condenser. The meter connected across the condenser is of such nature that it has no effect upon the current flowing in the circuit and does not require current for its operation. Such voltmeters are in use and shall be described later in this series. We will say that the voltage is 100 volts effective and that the value of the capacity is 2 microfarads.

Keeping in mind the above condition, we will assume that the capacity is connected across the circuit just at the moment that the voltage is rising from the zero value in the positive direction, i.e., increases above the zero line. The slope of the voltage rise in a sine wave is greatest at this moment and if we observe the antics of the three meters we note that the current is maximum at the moment that the voltage increases from the zero point and that it gradually decreases as the voltage E (applied) increases and the voltage across the condenser plate increases. We further note that the voltage applied and the voltage across the condenser plates vary in ste pwith each other. In other words E applied and Ec are in step but act in opposite direction as shown in figure 61B and the current in the circuit is zero when the voltage across the condenser plates and E applied are maximum. Referring to the previous discussion relative to the action of a condenser subject to a charging voltage, we recall that the maximum voltage across the condenser plates occurs when all of the charges influenced by the charging potential have been transferred from one plate to the other. Naturally, when the voltage across the plates equals the voltage applied, no further difference exists and since the direction of the action of these two voltages is equal and opposite, no further current flows. Referring to figure 61B, we note a definite phase relation between the voltage across the condenser plates and the charging current. They vary in similar fashion but not so with respect to time. With the zero point as the reference point, the current passes through the zero point before the voltage, to be exact, one quarter cycle in front of the votlage. This period may be expressed as 90° and it may be said that the current through a condenser leads voltage by 90° or the statement may be reversed and the same condition expressed as the voitage in a condenser lags behind the current by 90°. As to the applied voltage and the induced voltage, if we may call the voltage developed across the condenser plates by that name, these are of like magnitude but differ by 180°. They pass through the zero point at the same instant but act in opposite directions as shown. Contrast the relation between the current and voltage in an A.C. circuit containing only capacity with that found in an A.C. circuit containing resistance only.

In effect the application of the sine voltage E represents a variable D.C. voltage in the previous discussion and reversal of this variable D.C. voltage during the moment that the A.C. wave of voltage undergoes its reversal action. The condition of increasing current as the applied voltage and the voltage across the condenser decrease is quite natural, since any variation in charging voltage causes a flow of current in the direction opposite to that required for charging in order to produce equilibrium, and since the greatest change with respect to time occurs as the voltage approaches zero and passes zero, the current change is maximum at that moment.

CURRENT AND VOLTAGE RELATION IN AN A.C. CIRCUIT CONTAINING ONLY CAPACITY.—Supplementary to the phase relation in such a circuit, we must also consider the magnitude of current present when a sine wave of voltage is applied to such a capacity. From previous discussions of the factors which determine quantity of electricity in a circuit, we know that the greater the rate of flow of charges past a certain point, the greater is the quantity of electricity conveyed past that point. This is analogous to people walking in a street. The total number of people in that street may be definitely limited, but if they walk past a certain point at a speed greater than at some previous time, there will be a greater number of people moving past that point in a given time. Suppose that we consider any given point in the circuit shown in figure 61A. With a constant voltage of say 100 volts effective being applied and a frequency of 2 cycles per second, a certain quantity of electricity is conveyed past that point in a fraction of a second, say within 1 second. If we now increase the frequency to 60 cycles, maintaining the charging voltage at 100 volts, the number of charges which actually move past the given point in 1 second have been increased. The frequency of current reversal has been increased but the fact remains that the number of charges which move past a given point have been increased. If the frequency of the charging voltage is decreased, the number of charges which move past the given point have been decreased. Since these charges in motion represent current flow, we can say that the frequency of the charging voltage manifests an influence upon the current flow. Just what this action is will be shown in a subsequent paragraph.

We know that the capacity of a condenser has an effect upon the charge contained in the condenser. We further know that the charge Q is the quantity of electricity and that it is conveyed into the condenser at a certain rate with respect to time, expressed as current in amperes. The greater the capacity, the greater the charge and since current flow, the charging current is related to the charge, the value of the charging current is an indication of the charge. According to the previous paragraph, the magnitude of the charging current is governed by the frequency. Another controlling factor is the capacity of the condenser and the third naturally is the voltage.

There are, however, two factors which are always allied with condensers and the magnitude of charging current, yet bear no relation to the exact value of the charging voltage or the voltage applied. We find that these two factors display the controlling action upon the charging current. The exact value of the charging current necessitates consideration of the exact value of voltage, but the frequency and the capacity are applicable without reference to the magnitude of voltage when just the controlling action is required. This is analogous to the controlling action of a device which limits the flow of a gas without reference to the pressure behind the flow or the quantity of gas passed through the device.

Thus the use of a capacity in an A.C. circuit displays a limiting influence upon the value of current which will flow through that circuit (around the condenser through the circuit). This limiting influence is known as the REACTANCE of the condenser and because of its alliance with the condenser is called CAPACITY REACTANCE.

Now the maximum value of current

where $2\pi f$ is the angular velocity; f is the frequency in cycles and $2\pi f = 6.28$

C is capacity in farads and E is voltage in volts

I is current in amperes.

The maximum value of voltage Em is then equal to

$$Em = \frac{Im}{2\pi f C} = Im \times \frac{1}{2\pi f C} \qquad (57)$$

and in effective values

$$E\,eff = \frac{I\,eff}{2\pi f C} = I\,eff \times \frac{1}{2\pi f c}$$

The term

$$\frac{1}{2\pi f C} = \frac{1}{\frac{2\pi f \text{ cycles} \times C \text{ farads}}{1{,}000{,}000}}$$

$$= \frac{}{2\pi f \text{ cycles} \times C \text{ microfarads}}$$

is the reaction offered by the condenser to the flow of current and is seen to be independent of the voltage applied. It is, however, a function of the frequency and the capacity. For any one value of frequency $2\pi f$ is a constant frequently referred to by the small Greek letter ω (Omega). The total reactance, that is capacity reactance, is usually spoken of as Xc, the letter X representing reactance and the subscript c indicating that it is allied with capacity, thus where Xc is expressed in ohms, just like resistance.

$$Xc = \frac{1}{2\pi f C}$$

Now if we examine the equation for capacity reactance, we note that the value of reactance varies in a definite manner with respect to the variable quantities within the equation. The variable quantities are two in number. One is the frequency f, which depends upon the frequency of the voltage applied to the condenser or the location or utility of the condenser with respect to the frequency of the voltage in that system. The other variable is the capacity of the condenser, depending upon the value of

capacity necessary to fulfill certain requirements in the circuit.

If we analyze equation 58 we find that the reactance varies inversely with frequency and capacity when either is constant. In other words, the reactance decreases as the frequency is increased if the capacity is constant and likewise decreases if the capacity is increased and the frequency is constant. Varying inversely signifies a definite rate of decrease. If the capacity is constant and the frequency is doubled, the reactance is halved. The same is true if the frequency remains constant and the capacity is doubled. With such a relation it is evident that varying the frequency and capacity in opposite directions in a definite manner will produce no variation in reactance. Thus, if the frequency is doubled and the capacity is halved or if the frequency is halved and the capacity is doubled no variation in reactance will result.

If Xc represents the capacity reactance and the quantity which limits the value of the charging current, it is similar to the resistance R in the ordinary circuit. Hence, the current I with a known voltage E would be

and $E = I \times Xc$

The above relations show the difference between Ohm's law as it is applied in D.C. circuits and its application to an A.C. circuit containing a capacity. The usual term R is replaced by the new term Xc. Suppose that we consider a few numerical examples of capacity reactance. For the first example assume that the voltage E in figure 61A is 110 volts effective and that the capacity C is of 2 mfds. The frequency of the line supply is 60 cycles. What is the value of Xc and what is the value of the current in the circuit.

$f = 60$
$C = 2$ mfds.
$E = 100$

Then $2\pi f = 6.28 \times 60 = 377$

and $$Xc = \frac{1{,}000{,}000}{377 \times 2}$$
$$= 1325 \text{ ohms}$$

The effective value of the current is

$$I = \frac{100}{1325}$$
$$= .075 + \text{ amperes}$$

If we double the frequency, the value of $2\pi f$ is doubled and the reactance becomes 662 ohms, viz.:

At the new value of frequency $2\pi f = 6.28 \times 120 = 754$

and $$Xc = \frac{1{,}000{,}000}{754 \times 2}$$
$$= 663 \text{ ohms}$$

If we consider a .002 mfd condenser employed at a frequency of 120 cycles, the reactance Xc would be

$$Xc = \frac{1{,}000{,}000}{754 \times .002}$$

Plug Shorts to Boost Receipts, Advises Roach

Both child and adult attendance is being alienated by exhibitors through their failure to publicize the comedies they play, Hal Roach told Motion Picture News in an exclusive interview. This short-sighted policy, he said, is costing real dollars at the box office.

Hal Roach

The minute he gets home evenings, Roach said, he is importuned by his children to take them to the theatre and he generally ends by telephoning one of the three houses in his neighborhood to find out what is being shown. The reply always concerns the feature, and in most instances he is unable to obtain information concerning the comedy and its cast.

This instance, fairly general, is cited as evidence of exhibitors' failure to get full value from the junior feature portion of their programs. Most features, Roach argues, are not made for children and not intended to attract a child audience. The comedy is what interests the children, and often is the factor which induces parents to take their children to the theatre.

In practically all neighborhoods and smaller situations, the children are the most persistent ones in their demand for pictures, Roach declares.

"They take their parents to the theatres much more often than their parents take them. And whether or not they understand the feature or get any entertainment from it, they universally recognize the comedy as their particular part of the bill.

"It is a mistake not to capitalize thic fact," Roach asserts. "After an investment has been made in the comedy it should be given an opportunity to help the box-office."

Another point stressed by Roach is that not every one likes popular stars and players. Accordingly, he argues, some of the very names which are big draws keep other persons away from the theatre. Thus when patrons who do not like a certain name see it alone in the billing, they are inclined to look elsewhere for their entertainment.

Too late these patrons learn that their comedy favorite or favorites were on the program, and the only reason they missed the comedy was because it was not advertised. Very often, Roach argues, the comedy brings in persons who otherwise would remain away. As such, it should be given an opportunity to earn money at the box office, he says.

Increases Studio Facilities

Hollywood—Technical facilities have been expanded 33 per cent. and new noiseless recording cameras adopted at the Hal Roach studios, coincident with start of the new season program, calling for production of 30 comedies for M-G-M release. Plans now are under way for a fourth sound stage. The new cameras eliminate need for "bungalow attachments" on recording cameras.

Europe Selling Equipment Under U.S. Rate in China

Washington—European projectors are sold under those of American make and are, therefore, taking the edge off the market in China for domestic manufacturers. At the same time, the Department of Commerce reports in its survey of Eastern and African market, that it is generally granted that American machines are superior in quality.

Motion Picture News is publishing the full text of the Government report week by week. The latest installment follows:

From Reports by Jerome Marcs, Clerk to American Trade Commissioner

Projectors.—The projectors in general use throughout China are two American makes, Pathé (French), and Zeiss Ikon, Nitzsche, and Ertel (German). Prices vary in accordance with the model, but costs to theatre owners in Shanghai are approximately as follows:

American ..... $450—$1,050
French:

The superior quality of American projectors appeals to the theatre owner, but, on the other hand, this is offset by the somewhat cheaper prices prevailing for European machines, with quite satisfactory performance.

Theatres located in the larger cities in China, such as Shanghai, Hankow, Tiensin, Peiping, and Hong Kong, generally use two projectors, while those in the interior and in smaller ports use only one. First and second run theatres have fairly new models, smaller houses being equipped with rather old machines.

Generators, Arc Lamps, and Screens.—Possibilities for the sale of American generator sets are good, but somewhat limited. Prices must be exceedingly low to compete with German, Swedish, Belgium, and other European makes. High-intensity arcs are not used, while mirror-reflector arc lamps are being introduced at the present time. Screens are produced locally and are a white or silvered surface on cloth.

Visual Education.—It will be readily appreciated that the financial and political condition of China during the past years and at the present time has been such that scant attention has been paid to education; in consequence, motion pictures have rarely been used in the educational field. Supervision of education under the present Nationalist Government is in the hands of the Ministry of Education in the Central Government and comes under the control of the commissioners of education in the various provinces, under whose jurisdiction the purchase of equipment would come. The heads of missionary organizations in the United States may also be approached, since their educational institutions in China are the most advanced the country affords.

HONG KONG

HONG KONG

Based on Report by John J. Muccio, American Consul

Projectors.—Two American makes and the French Pathé are the three makes of projectors used in the 13 theatres of Hong Kong, having a total seating capacity of 8,350. Four of the largest and more modern use an American machine, eight of the smaller use the Pathé, and only one uses the other American make. The Hong Kong Amusements (Ltd.) has recently ordered several new projectors of another American make, to be installed in some of its larger theatres.

The Hong Kong selling prices for the different makes are as follows:

One American make:
Old or rebuilt model	$400
New model	550
Other American make	1,000
Pathé, 45-ampere	280
Pathé, 90-ampere	300

An inclosed type of American machine is generally held in high favor in Hong Kong, although on account of its higher cost it is not used in the smaller theatres. The smaller theatres prefer the Pathé, as it is more adaptable for use with scratched, broken, or worn-out films.

Dealers.—There is only one firm in Hong Kong handling both theatrical and non-theatrical types of equipment. This is a branch office of the Pathé-Orient. The Hong-Kong Amusements (Ltd.) has been importing projectors and equipment for use in its own theatres and for sale to houses throughout South China.

American theatrical equipment is not carried in stock in Hong Kong. The nearest stocks are at Shanghai and Manila. A branch of an American manufacturer has recently commenced to sell non-theatrical equipment and has undertaken a rather extensive advertising campaign in Hong Kong.

The Hong Kong Amusements (Ltd.) is already active in the distribution of projectors and equipment throughout South China and at present is the only independent firm importing those articles. It is not known to have the agency of any manufacturer, but purchases direct from manufacturers, generally in the United States. It is also the principal distributor of films in Hong Kong and South China and has the distribution of the products of several American companies. It not only owns and manages a large number of the theatres in Hong Kong, but also owns and manages a number in Canton and one in Macao. The firm is also interested in distribution in Shanghai and in the management of several theatres there.

Hong Kong is the distributing center for imports into South China generally. Practically all importers have branches or agents throughout the area, and agency agreements are usually made with Hong Kong firms for the entire territory. As many of the houses throughout South China are owned or controlled by Hong Kong interests or are allied with Hong Kong firms through film-distributing agreements, any dealer in Hong Kong appointed as agent would undoubtedly expect to have the exclusive agency rights for the whole of South China.

Hong Kong Chain Replacing With U. S. Projectors

Equipment Used.—Most of the theatres in Hong Kong are equipped with two projectors; the Queen's is the only one equipped with three. The majority are using old-model projectors. The Hong Kong Amusements (Ltd.) is in process of replacing some of its equipment with late-model American projectors. Four of the larger and more modern theatres are using what are supposed to be rather new models of another American make. It is understood that the American projectors are giving very satisfactory service.

Generators.—There appears to be little opportunity for the sale of American generator sets for converting alternating current to direct current. No transverters nor converters are used. The electric current supplied in Hong Kong is alternating, single phase, 50 cycle, 200 volts for lighting, fans, smaller appliances, and for motors of less than one British horsepower. For larger motors and appliances the current is 350 volts, 50 cycles. As most of the projectors in Hong Kong call for 40 volts the current available is worked into a motor which, in turn, operates a generator supplying the required voltage direct to the projector. This system is used in reducing the voltage, as it is less complicated than using converters, and, therefore, it is less difficult to train Chinese mechanics to keep it in repair. Practically all of the motor-generator sets are of American manufacture.

Arc Lamps.—Mirror-reflector arc lamps are used in the Hong Kong theatres, but none is of high intensity. This is due to the relative higher cost of high-intensity lamps on account of the greater consumption of electricity. Whereas the cost of electric current is now estimated at $2.50 per performance, it is estimated that the cost would be $10. If high-intensity arc lamps were used.

Screens.—Canvas-cloth screens painted flat white are generally used in the Hong Kong theatres. They are made locally. In a few walls painted flat white are also used.

Visual Education.—The Director of Education has supervision over all the educational institutions in the colony of Hong Kong, both government and private. Visual education has not taken hold in any of the schools or colleges in Hong Kong.

The Institute of Engineers and Shipbuilders of Hong Kong, the Helena May Institute for Women, and the Chinese Y. M. C. A. all have projectors used in conjunction with their lectures and educational programs. Many of the lectures and educational programs given under the auspices of those institutions are open to the general public.

Bill Miller, Bill Casel, Sam Leavitt and Charles Scrlano, Paramount cameramen, journeyed to Chicago and, instead of getting shot, did a little shooting of their own. They shot some preliminary scenes for the new William Powell vehicle, "New Morals," with Victor Schertzinger directing.

Under Norman Taurog's direction, "Manhattan Mary," starring Ed Wynn and featuring Stanley Smith, Ginger Rogers and Lou Holtz, was completed last week and, although our opinion was not solicited, we will venture to predict a bright future for this picture. Larry Williams was the man behind the lens in this one.

Going by Emanuel Jacobs' office we noticed that the door was ajar, so we walked in to see what we could see. Veni, vidi, vici. THE STUDIO SLEUTH.

Philly Symphony Concerts Bring New Competition

Philadelphia—It is not often that highbrow musical concerts are figured as film competition, but the announcement of the attendance at the nightly concerts of the Philadelphia orchestra in Robin Hood Dell, Fairmount Park, during this summer has awakened film men to the existence of a competitor more serious than "midget golf."

During the eight weeks of nightly orchestra concerts 225,000 persons have been in attendance, attracted by the chance to hear one of the greatest symphony orchestras in the world at the low box-office rate of 50 cents and $1. Nightly attendance has averaged over 4,000.

The project will be repeated next summer and exhibitors are beginning to estimate how many more of their prospective patrons will hear the voice of culture.

The Robin Hood Dell concerts are uniquely managed. The musicians, all regular members of the Philadelphia Orchestra, work on a strictly cooperative basis. They are paid no salary, but share in the receipts, an arrangement most profitable for this first season.

Brandt Charters New L. I. Theatre Company

Formation of Brandt Carlton Jamaica Co. to operate at Jamaica, Long Island, and chartering of a small group of theatre units by other interests highlight the current batch of corporate activities in Eastern states.

Dyker Heights Amusement Co., of Brooklyn, was formed at Albany. Other New York State companies included Companion Prod., New Gotham 125th St. Theatre, Hughes Ave. Theatre, Record-O-Mat, a sound reproducing equipment company; Padrae Co., Vanderbilt Revue Prod. and Exhibition Pictures Corp.

In Delaware, a charter was granted to Noon Amusement Corp., while New Jersey's secretary of state received incorporation papers for Twin Boro Amusement Co., of Roselle Park.

High and Low On Music Row

AT last it seems that Walter Donaldson has succeeded in writing another "Blue Heaven" after trying for the past few years to turn the trick. It's true that "Lazy Lou'siana Moon," published some time ago, was a fair seller, but in no way can it be compared with the former. During the past few weeks "Little White Lies" has leaped to the fore and shows every indication of being Donaldson's reward for persistency.

With the belief that it would make a valuable addition to the Robbins standard music department, "Anchors Aweigh," the official song of the Navy, written by Charles A. Zimmerman, musical director of the U. S. Naval Academy, was published. The buoyant nautical melody, dressed in a new arrangement, immediately gained favor with leading maestros throughout the country.

Jeannette McDonald, screen star, has recorded two songs, "Always in All Ways" and "Beyond the Blue Horizon," both from her latest Paramount production, "Monte Carlo," for Victor. The numbers were written by Leo Robin, Richard A. Whiting and Frank Harling and are published by Famous Music Co.

While under contract to Gertrude Lawrence, John W. Green, now staff composer at the Paramount New York Studios, wrote "Body and Soul," which was so successfully featured by Miss Lawrence in London that it has been chosen for Libby Holman to sing in the forthcoming musical, "Three's a Crowd." Ed. Heyman and Robert Sour wrote the lyrics and Harms will publish the song.

Universal Music Co. has just started work on a new ballad entitled "Can't We Be Sweethearts Again?", written by Ben Ryan, Bernie Grossman and Lou Handman, which looks like a sure thing. Handman, who recently arrived in New York for a few days' stay, returned to Universal City accompanied by Frank Goodman, president of the firm, who last month returned from Europe where he negotiated a successful deal for the British rights with Campbell-Connelly. Before leaving Goodman moved his firm into larger quarters.

The fact that there are many hits these past few weeks shows that the public will still buy good songs, and a wave of optimism among the publishers has taken place, the writers and publishers looking forward to the best situation in many months. The pop tune has come back with the same suddenness with which it disappeared when the theme song took the upper hand, albeit there will still be room for picture songs. But where there used to be as many as eight in one picture there will only be one or two at most.

appurtenances, is 290 yen ($145). The Waik, another Japanese projector similar to the Urban, is sold for 280 yen ($140). One-sixteenth horsepower motors for use with either of these projectors are sold for 100 yen ($50).

One of the leading Japanese theatres in Seoul uses a Japanese automatically operated Royal projector. The local price of this machine is 1,250 yen ($625), and payment is being made in monthly installments.

Two American-made automatically operated portable projectors are used practically exclusively by the government general. The local price of either of these projectors is 950 yen ($475). Other American-made projectors are used by educational and private business organizations, prices of which are understood to be about the same as the other two makes.

All of the theatres are equipped with two projectors to permit of continuous exhibition.

Generators.—While it is recognized by the theatres that clearer projection may be obtained from direct current, all of them are using alternating current. Principally because of the lack of capital, it is not likely that large sales, if any, of American generator sets for converting alternating current to direct current could be made.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—Theatres in Chosen do not use high-intensity and mirror-reflector arc lamps. Most of them are equipped with 1,000-watt lamps, while some of them have arc lamps with reflectors. The Gaumont arc is used almost exclusively. There are no new types.

The screens used are also practically all made in Japan of damask cotton cloth or canvas coated with silver paint, and sell for 30 to 50 yen ($15 to $25), depending on the size.

Visual Education.—Education in Chosen is controlled by the Educational Bureau of the government general at Seoul. In each provincial government there is an educational section which has control of the education within its province. Motion pictures, however, are produced and exhibited by special and separate groups of officials of the government general and of the provincial governments. In the government general a social affairs section has charge of taking and exhibiting motion pictures in co-operation with the educational and various other bureaus. Most of the equipment used is purchased locally or through larger dealers in Japan.

No regular plan or system of visual education has as yet been introduced in the educational institutions in Chosen. The pictures activities of the government general and of the provincial governments are, for the present, devoted principally to such subjects as improved methods of agriculture, sericulture, fishing, afforestation, living and social conditions, sanitation, and general publicity, news, and propaganda.

In this connection it may be added that the government general is interested in receiving and exchanging films of an educational character, especially those which have to do with such subjects as above indicated.

Germans Pass Swiss Film Censored in Switzerland

Berlin—National board of censors has given the Swiss picture, "Miseries and Joys of Women," a clean bill of health.

Made by Praesens Co., at Zurich, Switzerland, censors in that country have caused undue trouble to theatres showing the film. It was originally granted a "for adults only" permit.

Hungarian Decree Revises Quota Laws

Washington—The new decree which abolishes the "contingent" system in Hungary considerably clarifies the present uncertainty as to the cost of distributing foreign produced films, and greatly reduces the charges for silent films, according to the U. S. Dept. of Commerce.

At present the cost, in addition to the regular import duty of $50 per 220 pounds, is 20 fillers ($0.035) per meter to the film fund, seven fillers ($0.012) per meter censorship fee, and 1,500 pengos ($262.50) for a contingent license. Five short sound films not over 400 meters in length, were allowed to be distributed on one contingent license. The cost of the contingent license was not fixed by law or decree and could be changed at any time. Decree No. 2900/1929 M. E. stipulated that 20 contingent licenses would be issued for every Hungarian produced film over a certain length. There has been so little home production that it is to be wondered how contingent licenses could be issued. It was even possible that there would be no licenses available.

The new decree eliminates the feature of basing the number of licenses issued on the number of home produced films and provides that a fixed price of 1,000 pengos ($175) be charged for "import certificates" for sound films of more than 1,500 meters and 200 pengos ($35) for certificates for short sound films less than 400 meters in length. In addition to the 20 filler and seven filler charges now in force, there will be charged a supplementary fee of 200 fillers per meter on silent and of 40 fillers ($0.07) per meter on sound films.

Silent films are exempted from the requirement of furnishing an "important certificate," while newsreels, cultural educational, and scientific films are exempted from all charges except the import duty of $50 per 200 pounds.

Paragraph 1

For the sake of furthering the development of Hungarian film production a supplementary fee will be levied on every censored meter of foreign made films examined and approved by the National Film Examining Committee (O. M. B.) in excess of the examination fees in vigor. This supplementary fee will amount to 20 fillers per meter on silent and to 40 fillers on sound (synchronized and talking) films and will be placed at the disposition of the Film Fund.

The O. M. B. can not deliver the license document except against receipt of payment and delivery of an "import certificate" outlined in detail in paragraph 2.

Silent films are exempt from the obligation of submitting an import certificate; newsreels, cultural, educational and scientific films are exempt from all the above obligations.

Paragraph 2

In order to assist the domestic film production more efficaciously the Film Fund may grant a premium to the manufacturing concern on the films manufactured in Hungary.

With a view of creating a fund from which to pay these premiums, the Film Fund will issue "import certificates" in the following amounts: 1,000 pengos on each of the so-called large sound films more than 1,500 meters in length; 200 pengos each on the so-called small sound films, less than 400 meters in length.

The Film Fund will pay the premiums from the amounts thus received always proportionately to the sums at disposal and to the importance of the capital invested in the films produced and subject to the approval of the ministers charged with the exception of the present decree.

Premiums can only be paid on such sound films manufactured in Hungary after entering into effect of the present decree, which have been acceptd by th Film Fund as Hungarian films.

Paragraph 3

The Royal Hungarian Ministers of Commerce and of the Interior are hereby authorized to conclude through the intermediary of the Film Fund such arrangements for the execution of the obligations contained in this decree which will assure a more efficacious development of the Hungarian film production or will procure further markets for Hungarian films.

Paragraph 4

The revenues of the Film Fund will be handled by a Hungarian bank to be appointed by the two ministers charged with the execution of the present decree.

Paragraph 5

The date of entering into effect of this decre will be determined conjointly by the two ministers charged with its execution.

Paragraph 6

This decree will be executed conjointly by the Minister of Commerce and the Minister of the Interior.

To Paragraph 5: Simultaneously with the entering into effect of this decree.

Decrees Nos. 2900/1929 M. E. and 11,300/1927 M. E. will be cancelled. Official Gazette of July 4, 1930.

keres; "A Bird in a Cage," by Zsabka, Kalman; "There Is Just One Girl in the World," by Gal, Bela; "Eternal Love," by Bethlen-Lazar.

The producers make their sporadic attempts in the rented studios of the Hunnia or Star companies, the only legitimate production companies in Hungary at present. No studio in Hungary is yet equipped for sound production.

Hungarian authorities censored 1,519 films of a total length of 1,797,667 meters during 1929. Of these, 786 films of a length of 938,670 meters were American, 293 of 487,033 meters were German, 253 of 103,205 meters were Hungarian, 83 of 78,840 meters were British, 52,000 of 87,800 meters were French, 24 of 43,331 meters were Austrian, and 28 of 58,787 meters were from other countries. The 18 sound films censored in 1929 came from the United States and Germany.

The most interesting feature of 1929 affecting the industry was the issuance of a governmental decree providing that for every film produced in Hungary above a certain length and whose production cost was above a certain sum would be granted 20 censorship certificates. Every foreign-produced film requires one of these censorship certificates before it can be censored. The distributors of American films were able to have most of their films for the coming season censored before the decree went into effect, but a few certificates were required, about $265 each being charged for these certificates.

Sound Perks Up Business

With the introduction of sound films in the fall of 1929, the film business picked up considerably. The last months of the year witnessed an economic depression and a general lowering of the buying power of the public. This adversely affected the theatre business, and theatre owners are complaining of poor attendance, while distributors report they are having difficulties in sales and collections.

As in previous years, American films remained by far the most popular and in greatest demand.

Generally speaking, the trade expects the sound films, now that they have been introduced, to show the same rapid ascendancy as in the United States. Theatre owners with sufficient capital prefer the sound films, as they make more money from them, but poorer owners in Budapest and the Provinces are disinclined to move until they must. However, lack of capital is the chief impediment at present. The striking success of Hungary's first sound picture has convinced most theatre owners that they must add sound equipment or lose their patronage. Most of them, however, are inclined to restrict their outlay as much as possible and to install cheap apparatus which, regardless of quality, gives them the right to advertise sound performance. All the larger provincial houses and second and third-run houses desire sound equipment. Quite a few have already made moves in that direction.

No concrete plans for sound production have yet been formed, but the manager of the Hunnia Film Co. has declared himself in favor of equipping his studio for making sound pictures.

At present contingent licenses for feature films cost both American and foreign distributors 1,500 pengos ($265) each. In addition they must pay 20 fillers (0.035) per meter to the film funds and 7 fillers per meter for censorship. In contingent tickets, four short films are regarded as the equivalent of one feature film.

War Nurse

A Knockout

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

OIL up the B.O. cash register. It's going to heat up with this one. Here's one picture which can go into any house in the country, pack the seats, and make 'em like it. It's one war angle that hasn't been exploited and the way M-G-M has handled the story makes it sure-fire.

Every ex-service man who was ever near a hospital will come out boosting the picture. It portrays the hardships, the labors, the dangers and the loves through which the handful of women participating in the conflict passed.

From a layman's angle the technical direction is excellent. The emergency hospital is perfect. The rough operating room, the lack of equipment, the unbelievable hours through which the nurses struggled are brought home with a bang.

The mental reactions of these girls, gathered together from various walks of life; the stolid bravery and nerve they display when war-torn men, dying, groaning and screaming, are brought to them to die in their arms, is an epic story that deserved filming.

Their let-downs from the terrific ordeal, their loves, parties, and trysts, their realization that with death probable the next minute there was but a single standard of morals for the sexes, make of this a real portion of the war's history.

It is essentially a picture by and of women although it is natural that there are a few soldiers in it—and a couple of romances.

June Walker, a pleasant little stage comedienne, makes her picture debut as the head nurse and Robert Montgomery's particular passion at the moment. He is cast as an American aviator in the French army.

Miss Walker does some really exceptional acting, makes the audience like her, but seemingly lacks that necessary personality to ever crash to picture stardom. She is a bit too chunky and wholesome to fit every part. Montgomery, in the leading male role, scores another definite hit.

The scene between these two in Miss Walker's sleeping hut when she betrays her love for him and he discloses that, to him, she is just another girl to satisfy his yearnings, is a very fine piece of work.

The other romance is between Anita Page and Robert Ames. Miss Page comes as near stealing a picture as anybody could. She is seen as the pampered and convent-trained daughter of rich Americans. She has a hard time becoming adjusted to the changed environment. The scenes when she returns, happy, after spending the night with Ames, her later subsequent discovery that he is married, the abandonment of all restraint, her reaction to orders home, the return to the front-line hospital and the fine work as she dies, after giving birth to her baby when the hospital is bombarded, are all excellent bits of dramatic work.

Helen Jerome Eddy snares no little of the glory with her delineation of a studious, home-trained, clean-minded country girl from Kansas. Her continued display of wonder at the startling horror of war and the actions of the other nurses is worthily handled.

The breath-stilling scene with Miss Walker, when "Kansas" reveals that she, too, has found reason to change her mind on various beliefs and betrays the fact that she has acquired a disease, is a highlight.

Her death was well done, as was a great deal of the war stuff.

Marie Prevost gets across numerous wise-cracks and makes herself generally useful throughout the production when things lag. Zasu Pitts contributes several laughs. Hedda Hopper is impressive as the gentle-hearted superintendent of nurses.

A woman's picture all the way—but almost any adult will like it.

News reel support will be sufficient.

What a Widow

Slapstick Farce

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

GLORIA SWANSON plays an entirely new type of role in her latest talker, "What a Widow." The sparkling-eyed star proves to be an extremely clever comedienne and at no time does she let the play get serious. It will perhaps surprise many Swanson fans to see her in such a slapstick style of comedy, but they will undoubtedly enjoy it.

This film should stand up well in the better first-run houses and subsequent bookings. Has plenty of exploitation angles and with the many feminine style displays, she should go over great with the women.

Miss Swanson is the widow who, upon the death of her husband, finds that she has five millions to spend and nothing to stop her from so doing. She leaves for Paris after a spending spree in the New York shops and it is while on board the liner bound for France that she starts her exciting career. Owen Moore is her lawyer and he tries to look out for her. Love interferes with business, as he falls for the widow heavily. However, he continues to stick to the business side only, and serves as her guardian. On the trip over Gloria becomes the feminine favorite among the men passengers when the ship concert affords her a chance to sing. While on board she meets with Lew Cody, a famous ballroom dancer, who is perpetually soused. A dance scene with Cody and Swanson doing an acrobatic adagio is a riot for fun and the numerous falls taken by the pair affords plenty of slapstick comedy.

Arriving in Paris, Miss Swanson has one affair after the other. First, it is with Gregory Gaye, a Russian violinist. Then an affair with Herbert Brazzitti, a Spanish singer. The outcome of this is that both tell her she will have to run away with them or they will kill her. She seeks Moore's protection, but finds another woman in his office. In order to get revenge she goes with Lew Cody to the home of one of his friends who is away at the time. Here the pair stage a drunk scene that is the highspot of the picture. Swanson passes out and Cody puts her to bed. Upon leaving the bedroom the door locks and he has to stay outside. In the morning Miss Swanson awakes and, thinking the worst, tells Cody he will have to marry her. He is too drunk to tell her the truth until the last minute, when she finds that she has been unharmed. Upon learning this she goes to find Moore and discovers that he is taking the Dornier D-OX plane for America. She procures passage and they are married aboard the airship. The final fadeout shows them sailing over the Statue of Liberty and down Broadway as the ship seeks the landing field. These last sequences are process shots and are very good.

Top notch performances are given by Miss Swanson, Lew Cody and Owen Moore. Miss Swanson is beautifully photographed and her acting is very good all through the picture. Her singing, as before, is outstanding and she has some fine songs. Lew Cody, who is inebriated throughout the entire picture, provides much mirth by his antics and handles the various situations with great finesse, never overdoing the part. Owen Moore as the romantic male lead is fine. Some of the scenes are so fast that the dialogue is indistinct, but the fast movement is a help to the picture and it does not drag in any part. Modernistic settings enhance the values throughout.

Others in the cast who are most capable are William Holden, Nella Walker, Gregory Gaye, Margaret Livingston and Adrienne D'Ambricourt.

The Cat Creeps

(Universal)

Spooky Old Favorite

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

OO-O-OH! Here it is back again. Universal has gone and filmed "The Cat and Canary" with all the accompanying shrieks and howls of that old footlight screamer.

They've taken a rather excellent cast and followed the stage play quite closely. The result is a fairly good program thriller. The preview showing brought out several glaring weaknesses in direction with every change from the original plot floundering badly.

Universal is still working on the production and perhaps will emerge with a satisfactory programmer when the final shots are made and the picture is eventually finished.

The weakest feature of the preview showing was the deviation from the original stage climax. Those who view the picture wait for each step in the old familiar plot. They were visibly disappointed when the picture flattened out dismally at the conclusion with an ending totally different than the stage offering.

It is understood that the Laemmles have ordered considerable more shooting with a changed finish carrying added punch. The picture will bear another scrutiny after this is done before definitely setting its box-office value.

Lilyan Tashman really grabs the major portion of the honors when the cutters have let her. Helen Twelvetrees proves a satisfactory heroine while Blanche Frederici handles the principal character role in a very capable fashion.

Raymond Hackett can polish his romantic hero role a bit in the retakes. Neil Hamilton does his part in real trouper fashion.

Use musicals and cartoons here.

Outward Bound

(Warners)

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

AWAY from the beaten track of pictures is this Vitaphone presentation of Sutton Vane's eerie and fantastic play. It is unusual and finely done, but the earlier reels are slow-moving and lack force. This is due to the weakness of the story, but the picture gains momentum and has a strong finish.

It is hard to peg this so far as audience reaction is concerned. It is a daring innovation, but its funereal theme and tempo probably will be against it so far as the rank and file of film fans are concerned. Because of this, it may be termed a class picture. A foreword explains that the sponsor of the original play was fearful that audiences would regard it as a satire, rather than a serious-minded drama, attempting to give some insight into death and the hereafter. That, too, is the picture's great danger, but the foreword also serves to emphasize the sombreness of the film.

Beryl Mercer's work stands out head and shoulders above that of the others, due to a combination of fine acting and the strongest part. She is the cockney mother who has hidden her identity from her wastrel son that he might be brought up as a gentleman. Leslie Howard, as the son, turns in an excellent performance. Helen Chandler also gives a fine performance, and rises to the big climax in capable fashion. Direction is fine and photography superb.

The story concerns the voyage of a phantom ship whose passengers are dead and do not know it until a series of events aboard convince them that none know where they are going nor why. There are a young couple (Fairbanks and Helen Chandler) who know only that they want to be together always; a prodigal son (Howard), his mother (Beryl Mercer), whose identity the son does not know; a society woman (Alison Skipworth), a minister (Lionel Watts), a captain of industry (Montagu Love), and the steward (Alec B. Francis). They arrive at their destination and all are judged by the Examiner (Dudley Rigges). But the young couple must return. They are "half-ways," persons who have committed suicide. On the return voyage Fairbanks disappears; he has been snatched from death by gas by the breaking of a window pane by his dog. He turns back long enough to take the girl with him, and an ambulance squad brings the action back to an earthly plane as the young couple is rescued.

This is a picture which will require intensive and deft selling on the part of the exhibitor. Not only must they be brought in, but must be put into the proper frame of mind if the picture is to go over.

Selection of shorts for this is important and difficult, but the program should be in keeping with the picture's dignified theme, avoiding comedies.

Doorway to Hell

(Warners)

Good Gangster Film

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

FOR audiences that like underworld talkers this one will fill the bill in good fashion. It has plenty of action and is true to form, with the writer evidently knowing what the real underworld is like. Lew Ayres, as the youthful gang-leader, is convincing.

Should stack up okay in the week run houses and split week spots. Will stand plenty of exploitation.

As the young gang leader who wanted to make his pile of dough and then give up the racket, Lew Ayres is most acceptable. His exploits in handling the gang and his organizing of the various rival gangs forms the main part of the picture. The story deals with Ayres bringing around the heads of the underworld, telling them in graphic fashion that he is going to be the leader and that from then on they will take orders from him only.

How he manages to keep the tough boys on his side and keep them from hijacking one another is well told and provides many thrilling sequences. Besides running the gang, Ayres also falls for a girl who, seeing that he is making plenty of dough, marries him, while in realty she cares for James Cagney, Ayres' pal. This love between Cagney and Dorothy Mathews, the girl, is not revealed to Ayres at any time during the film.

After getting the numerous gangs organized and the "beer racket" put on an apparently firm basis, Ayres leaves town and gives up the game. When he goes the tough boys clash and the others in an effort to get Ayres back, plan to kidnap his kid brother, Leon Janney. Janney is run over by a beer truck while escaping the gunmen and when Ayres hears what has happened he returns and proceeds to bump off those implicated in a spectacular manner. The cops, however, are hot on his trail and he is finally arrested. His escape from prison is planned, so he thinks, by his gang, but a rival outfit does the jail breaking in order that they may take Ayres "for a ride." Cornered, and knowing he is unable to make a getaway, Ayres goes to his death at the hands of the rival gang.

The story is well told as the details are brought out in a realistic manner and not grotesque, as in many gangster pictures. The direction by Archie Mayo is commendable.

Others besides Ayres, whose work was outstanding, are Dorothy Mathews, Leon Janney, Robert Elliott, James Cagney and Noel Madison. Elliott as the detective was very good.

Use good comedy shorts and musicals.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by Archie Mayo. From the story by Rowland Brown. Screen play and dialogue by George Rosener. Photography by Chick McGill. Edited by Bob Crandall. Running time, 70 minutes.

Way for a Sailor

Gilbert Gets Rough

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THIS rollicking story of how sailors spend their time ashore and afloat gives John Gilbert a new type of character to play and he does it effectively. As the rough and ready merchant marine seaman he thinks only of two things, fighting and loving, and he does both.

Gilbert fans especially will like this one as it offers their favorite in a new role. Will hold up in the better week run houses and is good for the split week places. The much discussed Gilbert voice is greatly improved and will not disappoint.

Gilbert, Jim Tully and Wallace Beery form a trio that finds no fight too tough nor any dame too hard to handle, and what a time they have. The romance deals with Gilbert's efforts in trying to get on the good side of Leila Hyams, who will have nothing to do with him. Every time he is in port he calls to see her, but she repels his advances and it is only after many calls, over a period of years, that he succeeds in getting a chance to be with her alone.

Then she finds that he is really not such a bad fellow and while he is apparently always on the make, she rather likes him. However, when he gets too fresh and kisses her, she tells him to go and never return. After the next voyage Gilbert again shows up and prevails upon Miss Hyams to listen to him. She does and it all winds up by them getting married. After the ceremony she perceives that Gilbert cares only to win her and then leave, so while he is out of the house she slips away.

Next he is shown as quartermaster of the boat Miss Hyams is traveling on, he having pursued her all over the world. He has become more than a common sailor, as she wished, but she still remembers the wedding day and will not forgive him. Then comes a storm which wrecks the Chinese Star, the vessel on which Tully and Beery are sailing. Gilbert, and others of the larger vessel, go to the distressed ship with a line to carry the breeches buoy. Miss Hyams, watching him risk his life to save his pals realizes that she loves him after all and when he fails to return she is heartbroken.

Gilbert, Tully and Beery go down with the doomed ship, but are rescued by a whaling vessel and after a six months' cruise on it they return to port. Gilbert has already sent a message to Leila and she is waiting for him at the dock, so everything ends well.

The talker has comedy and action galore. When the three seamen are not fighting they are concocting some mischief and what a time they have. Beery, as usual, steals many scenes and his comedy is very good, especially when he takes over the handling of a pet seal and when he plays the concertina. Tully does well in his new role, that of an actor. To Gilbert, however, belongs most of the credit. He carries his part in great style and handles his love making in a rough, yet clever manner. Miss Hyams is particularly good in the feminine lead, while Polly Moran and Doris Lloyd are most acceptable in their respective roles.

The picture has some process shots that are not at all effective and perhaps will be cut out when the picture is ready for release. The comedy is extremely risque in spots and the dialogue is rather strong, but considerable cutting will help get it by. The storm at sea is graphically shown and very effective. Many fights occur during the story and these help keep the piece at a fast tempo. When ready for the exhibitor this picture should have plenty of attraction and satisfy.

Use musicals, cartoons and comedies here.

Additional dialogue by Charles MacArthur. Photographed by Percy Hilburn. Edited by Frank Sullivan. Length, not set. Running time, not set. Release date, Oct. 11.

A Crow

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

UNQUESTIONABLY one of the most amateurish efforts emanating from Hollywood studios in many months—and that's saying plenty! It is so floppy—and sloppy—that one questions whether or not its production had been placed in the hands of studio laborers instead of the staff listed by the producer on his credit chart. The dizzy heights of stupidity are reached before half of the first reel is un-wound and continues until arrival of the final fadeout a welcome relief.

Nothing short of the most unsophisticated audience, away out in the sticks, or in very small neighborhoods, will give it a tumble. And then only on a double feature program—provided the supporting attraction is plenty good.

There are two slightly favorable qualities existing in the picture. Comedy supplied by a pair of youngsters is agreeable and song renditions by Nancy Welford and Jason Robards get by. However, the cast as a whole turns in a weak-kneed, unimpressive performance. At times they behave like the would-be actors of school plays. Myrna Loy is lost in this one—and how!

The continuity writer used a butcher's knife in chopping up what little threads of a story exist. Sound and photography are both mediocre. And the dialogue is nothing short of being atrocious.

That age-old question of marriage as it affects a union between poor and rich is the basis of this piece of junk. Nancy Welford is the girl in love with a wealthy society leader, Jason Robards, whose ritzy mother fights hard to discourage the affair, but of course she doesn't succeed, because their love is the "true love."

Use only on a double-feature bill or with unusually strong short subjects.

Produced by George R. Batcheler-Chesterfield Pictures. Distributed by Chesterfield, via State Rights market. Directed by Scott Pembroke. Photography by M. A. Anderson. Play by Edwin Johns. Adaptation and dialogue by Adrian Johnson and Scott Pembroke. Edited by Don Hayes. Length, 6,181 feet. Running time, 67 minutes. Release date, Aug. 14.

Breezy Bill

(Syndicate)

Weak Western

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THERE is some action in this silent, but the story is pretty weak and the acting none too good. Bob Steele is worthy of better vehicles and direction than were available in this. Some of the comedy gets laughs, but most of it will prove unfunny to any but kid audiences.

Two bandits, Bud Osborne and Cliff Lyons, try to steal some securities from a rancher (Alfred Hewston). His adopted son tries to intervene, but is knocked out, and the rancher kidnaped. The adopted son (Steele) is suspected of the kidnaping, but manages to escape. He dons a very flimsy disguise and, with the rancher's nephew, trails the bandits to their hangout, where he finds the rancher handcuffed to a cot. The nephew is captured when Steele's obvious disguise is discovered by the bandits, but Bob easily escapes and goes back for help. There are a couple of tame fights, when the bandits follow, but the sheriff arrives to settle things.

This will have difficulty carrying a program, but on a double-feature bill it may get by with the kids.

Needs plenty of short subject help.

The Wizard's Apprentice

Good Novelty

A FANTASTICAL interpretation of Goethe's "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." The youth attempts to employ the black magic of his master, with dire results. He succeeds in some trick stuff, and then finds he cannot break the spell. Threatened with drowning in the sorcerer's workship, he finally is saved by the master, who upbraids him for his folly. Running time, 7 minutes.

Good with comedy shorts.

(Pathe)

Fair

THIS Vagabond Adventure short doesn't live up to its title, although Tom Terriss tries to curdle the blood with his excitable rhetoric. Several shots of snakes constitute the "terrors," the major portion of the footage showing domesticated elephants at work moving logs. However, it is decidedly interesting and will appeal generally. Running time, 10 minutes.

Spot in anywhere.

(No. 2. "David and Goliath")

(Universal)

Okay

THE second of this series breezes along at a merry pace, blissfully disregarding plausibility or sanity, but it is highly entertaining throughout and should build up interest in any type house. Kane Richmond, who takes the role Reginald Denny popularized in the silent series years ago, is entirely satisfactory as the pugilist hero of these H. C. Witwer stories, but it's only in pictures that a fighter of his light build can knock out a blacksmith with the ease he demonstrated in this issue. However, it's all in fun, with Sam Hardy, as the manager, netting a number of laughs. Directed by Al Kelley. Running time, 19 minutes.

Will fit in anywhere.

(Pathe)

Will Please

ONE in the series of Campus Comedies and far superior to its predecessors, the cast and background being authentically collegiate. The story, concerning the hazing of a freshman and the manner in which he turns the tables on his tormentors, is interesting, although it could have been speeded up. While it is lacking in punch, it is well made and will satisfy generally. Don Dillaway, Vera Marsh and Monroe Owsley head the cast. Directed by Ray McCarey. Running time 21 minutes.

Okay for any type program.

Strange As It Seems

(Universal)

Good

THIS is the first of Universal's new series of shorts, based on the newspaper feature by John Hix, along the lines of Ripley's "Believe It or Not," and it clicks because its subject matter is decidedly interesting to all who appreciate the unusual, which takes in everybody, and because it's done in Multicolor with striking effects, the color being distinct and natural. The synchronized talk (not delivered by Hix, who doesn't appear on the screen, either) was not cued to the footage so that there were considerable periods when the interest lagged after the ending of the spiel. This defect needs to be remedied. There is sound throughout.

The initial offering includes shots of the interior of the Chinese telephone exchange in San Francisco; the puffer fish of Samoa, which can blow itself up to four times its size; the man who can live up-side-down for hours at a time, eating and drinking in that position; and proof that the celebrated painting showing Washington crossing the Delaware is all wet because the flag carried on the boat was not designed until many months later. The painting, by a German, has gone unchallenged until lately. Running time, 9 minutes.

Fine for building up any program.

(Pathe)

Passable

THE camera invades the home of Bernarr Macfadden, True Story Magnate and Physical Culture Devotee, for the purpose of allowing Macfadden to deliver a talk on "dynamic health" and sing "When the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold" in the midst of his numerous offsprings. His gestures and voice are very funny. Some close-ups of "Cleopatra's Flower" are mildly interesting, and then from the archives come scenes of Kaiser Wilhelm, King George's coronation as Emperor of India, Czar Nicholas, Emperor Franz Joseph, Kerensky, Secretary of War Baker, the start of the Navy's first transatlantic flight and the burning of Smyrna. They prove that photography has advanced considerably since 1911. Running time, 11 minutes.

Okay for a novelty unit.

Interesting

Running time, 8 minutes.

Where novelty is wanted.

The Singing Sap

(Universal)

Fair

THIS Oswald cartoon follows the conventional lines, and does not pack a fraction of the kick that this series contained in the earlier days. Every portion of the background can be turned into a musical instrument, every animal, bird and fish can sing—oh, you know the rest. It's not bad, as cartoons go nowadays, and will no doubt net a number of laughs. Running time, 7 minutes.

Use where a cartoon is needed.

Farm Foolery

(Pathe—Aesop Fables)

Trite

JUST one of those things. The farm animals sing and dance and cut up generally. There's a snicker or two in it, but it's like most of the cartoons you've seen of late. Running time, 7 minutes.

Will serve to diversify a bill.

Big Anniversary Week Puts Chi House in Red

Chicago—An epidemic of theatre "anniversary celebrations" has seized this town. Every week brings announcements from houses anywhere in the city that are observing an anniversary of anything from opening of the house to installation of sound equipment. The climax appears to have been reached by a north side house now celebrating the first anniversary of its biggest gross by appealing to the "civic spirit of the community" to beat the old record.

The house went into the red during the anniversary week.

Encouraging the anniversaries is the cheapness with which the splurges can be staged. Bakers and confectioners have shown themselves perfectly willing to kick in with a birthday cake and a couple of cans of ice cream. The cakes, usually with candles, too, are left on display in the lobbies during the anniversary week; then sliced for the customers at its close.

The stunt has the hearty support of neighborhood druggists and physicians and usually results in filling the house with kids, particularly on cake-cutting day.

M-G-M Cutting Personnel

Chicago—Home office orders for economies and retrenchments in the exchanges are resulting in reductions of personnel in several exchanges here. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is the latest to cut operation expenses by reducing office staffs. Women workers are the ones slated for lay-offs, with married men being given the break.

First National and Warner exchanges recently made extensive cuts in office personnels here. Local Publix Theatres office is also pruning wherever possible.

Film English

Chicago—A local theatre owner who writes his own copy for the trailers used in his house decided on some promotional stuff recently. The copy submitted to the trailer house began with: "The House from Quality."

Copy reader wanted to make the correction, but the exhib stood pat for English as his customers understand it.

Fun for Frank

Chicago—Frank Ishmael is one of M-G-M's blue ribbon contract-snarers. He is accustomed to the Better Things of Life.

One day Frank found his son playing with a new toy.

"What's that?" he asked, always eager to learn of the new.

"It's a Ford," replied the heir to the Ishmael properties.

Frank got out of his Lincoln and took the toy away from his son. He drove it out to a neighborhood theatre and parked it nearby. An hour and a half later Frank emerged from the manager's office and hunted up his son's toy. He worked on it frantically for thirty minutes, but the thing refused to perk. Finally, he returned to the theatre, kidnapped the manager and forced him to get into his own car and push the Ishmael toy about the streets. Twenty miles of this and no sign of life from the so-and-so thing. Crowds began to gather. Finally, an onlooker, brighter than the rest, detached himself from the mob, pressed a little button on the dash, stepped on the starter and the willing motor roared.

Frank Ishmael

Frank looked at the man in amazement.

"What was that thing you pushed?" he asked.

"The ignition switch," replied the stranger, modestly.

B. & K. Duels RKO For Name Draws In Chi Houses

Chicago—The stage show rivalry between Publix-B. & K. and RKO, which developed into a brisk contest to place the biggest "names" in Loop theatres, has revived again after several weeks of inactivity.

B. & K. laid off its flesh extravagances after the splurge with Will Rogers, which cost $9,000, but was worth it. The RKO houses, Palace and State-Lake, likewise offered only ordinary vaudeville fare during the ensuing weeks, but stepped back into the breach again with Frances Williams at the Palace and Jack Osterman at the State-Like.

In retaliation, B. & K. put Lillian Roth into the Chicago and now announces a policy of a "star a week" at either the Chicago or Oriental theatres. Miss Roth is to be followed by other Paramount stars. Definitely booked are Jack Oakie, Mitzi Green, Buddy Rogers and Eddie Cantor.

Charles Kaley and Ukulele Ike (Cliff Edwards) are parrying on the RKO bills at present, with other headliners in prospect. The duel will continue with B. & K.'s film personalities vying for dough with RKO's stage folk.

"Blue" Ruling Awaited

Chicago—The Evanston Sunday show question has been referred to Master in Chancery George E. Gorman, who is expected to make a ruling Sept. 20 on the theatre owners' petition for an injunction to restrain Evanston police from closing the theatres on Sunday.

Publix's Empty Desks

Chicago—Publix economy efforts are evident in the number of empty desks in the B. & K. offices on the fifth floor of the Loop End Building. At 3 P. M. the office looks as it used to during the lunch hour.

Ante Down

Chicago—Signs of the times: Riverview Amusement Park reports twice as many visitors during the current season as last year; yet the gross is only half that of a year ago.

And twice as many tags were sold here on Have a Heart Day as last year, but receipts were $8,500 less, charity workers report.

Chi State-Lake Drops Vaudeville; Gets Spoor Film

Chicago—RKO's State-Lake, Loop vaude-film spot, becomes a first-run picture house Sept. 28, with all vaude out. The 2,800-seat house is taking as its first production under the new policy the Spoor-Berggren 70 mm. film recording of "Danger Lights," a Radio railroad drama with Louis Wolheim. A new wide screen is being installed in the theatre as well as the new Spoor-Berggren projectors. This will constitute the first showing anywhere of a picture employing this equipment.

The RKO lease on the Woods is up this month, with the possibility that "Africa Speaks" (Col.), which goes in this Saturday, will be the last picture to play the house under RKO management. This leaves the circuit with only two Loop houses. The vaude-film Palace continues on the same policy.

"Hell's Angels" Set Again for Chicago Run

Chicago — United Artists has again changed its plans for showing "Hell's Angels" here. Originally, U. A. announced the picture would go into the United Artists theatre for an extended run, but this plan was abandoned later and it was decided to road-show the spectacle. No suitable theatre was found available, however, and the exchange announced this week that the picture would go into the United Artists as originally planned. The opening will probably not occur before November.

Supply Company Offices Moving to New York

Chicago—General offices of the National Theatre Supply Co., located at 624 South Michigan Ave., will be moved to New York some time this month. The move is being made in the interests of administration efficiency and economy. The offices in New York will be in connection with those of the International Projector Corp.

Golfie Owned By Village; Rivals Socked Plenty

Chicago — The suburb of Oak Park, which lays claim to the title of "The largest village in the world," has enacted an ordinance compelling all miniature golf courses in the town to close at midnight. The annual license fee for the courses was boosted from $75 to $100.

Oak Park is in the miniature golf business itself. The village established municipally operated midget links in various parks and playgrounds during the summer. Village revenue from this source was estimated at $50,000 recently.

Chicago—B. & K.'s Tivoli is featuring two teams of endurance dancers in a current stage show. The hoofers dance over to the theatre from the marathon contest in a nearby ballroom three times daily (four on Saturday and Sunday) and back again without parking their dogs at any time. They are even obliged to keep shuffling backstage while waiting their turn to go on.

Essaness Gets Eighteenth

Chicago—Essaness took over the Regent last week which, with the Chateau, boosts the string to eighteen houses. The Regent lease is for approximately ten years at a term rental of $80,000. The acquisition gives Essaness a pretty good hold on the Pink Coast (Sheridan Rd.) trade.

Oppose Review of Bill-Posting Case

Washington—Opposing a review of the long pending case of the Associated Bill Posters of the U. S. against Wm. H. Rankin Co. and Charles A. Ramsay Co., the two respondents have just filed briefs in U. S. Supreme Court, which is asked to "terminate the protracted litigation" by denial of the petition for a writ of certiorari.

The suit, it is explained, was instituted by the respondent companies, organizations engaged in the business of soliciting national outdoor advertising, to recover treble damages under the anti-trust laws alleged to have been sustained by reason of the Bill Posters Association discontinuing their membership. They alleged that they had been deprived of their businesses by reason of prior unlawful acts of the association in violation of the anti-trust laws.

It was pointed out that, in 1912, the United States instituted anti-trust proceedings against the association and obtained an injunction restraining them from pursuing the illegal practices complained of. The instant cases were instituted in 1918, based upon complaints following the Government's petition, and pleading the rendition of the Federal court's decree.

The petition for a review by the Supreme Court of the United States, filed following the lower courts' ruling adverse to the association, contended that the material allegations of the complaint were not made out, that the respondents, who were former members of the association while it engaged in the practices restrained in the anti-trust proceeding, were in pari delicto, and that, in any event, damages should not have been awarded subsequent to July 6, 1916, the date of the anti-trust decree.

The brief in opposition contends that all these questions are directed to the sufficiency of the amended complaints "long since decided by the court in appeals" and that there is nothing new or novel now present that would be of general importance.

Twins

Manchester, Eng.—What is believed to be the first "twin" theatre has opened in this town. Originally plans called for a dance hall and restaurant on one floor, but changes were made for the creation of a second house in the theatre structure. One runs continuously and the other on a two-a-day policy.

Universal Adopts 'Overhaul' System

Hollywood—A system which has proved successful with other studios is being tried by Universal with hopes of beneficial results. The plan is this: Talkers are previewed in very rough form with a lengthy footage. Scenes which are not even planned to be used are judged and scenes that are expected to go over well and fail are remade. The policy is retaking scenes that are weak and in some cases adding sequences in places that will bolster up the film. Three pictures have been recently "overhauled" at Universal, "The Cat Creeps," "East Is West" and "Command to Love." When finished it is expected the talkers will show about fifty percent improvement.

Theatre Theme Song

Toledo—And now the theatre theme song. The authors of the innovation are Jack O'Connell and Roy Sherman, who are using "Beautiful Ohio" as the musical theme at each presentation at the Ohio, 1,000-seat suburban house which they recently took over. They have completely remodeled the house and installed Earl Smith as manager. O'Connell is manager of the Vita-Temple, first-run house, while the latter is a local business man.

Silent Slump Blamed for W-P Prod. $329,000 Loss

London—Welsh-Pearson Prod. reports net loss of $320,750 for the yearly period just ended. Changeover to talkers is blamed by directors for the "red" figure, claiming that the company was already well under way with a silent program before it was realized that talkers and not silents were wanted by British exhibitors.

Prices Cut by Two Houses at Cincy

Mistaken Ideas!

"WHY don't the producers give us good pictures?" was one of the many questions we heard after we left Hollywood on the long return trek of our recent coast to coast trip. Somehow, the impression exists among many showmen that the studios are not trying to turn out good pictures.

Well, the only answer I can give is, that the executives, and everyone else, who has anything to do with the production on the coast, are trying to make each picture a great box office attraction just as hard as each live-wire showman is trying to make them profitable at the theatres.

It seems only natural that for a time the productions should come through, perhaps a little under par, but when you stop to consider what the studios had to do in the way of revamping and readjusting their methods of productions, etc., by reason of talking pictures, then sooner or later the market was certain to be flooded with pictures of all types without particular regard for their value at the b.o.

This came about, not intentionally, but sort of accidental. They were rushed. Anything that sounded good for the talkies was grabbed up and put into production. First one, and then another type of picture seemed to be the craze. War stories, stage stories, prison stories. They ran in all sorts and manner of cycles.

But now production is practically back to its former point of efficiency, plus the big variety of subjects available because they lend themselves to the new mode in entertainment.

Pay no attention to idle chatter about pictures getting worse and worse. As a true matter of fact, more attention is being given to story material and production plans than at any time in the history of the industry.

From my own careful observations on the coast I feel safe in saying that the outlook for the coming season's product is great. Some of the advance studio previews I caught have convinced me that whatever stimulus the b.o. needed will be forthcoming this season.

You, too, can reach the same conclusion if you stop to analyze the new product yourself. Look over the advance announcements; see the type of stories, stars and directors. Judge them by past performances if necessary.

They are more anxious to turn out successful audience pictures than you are to sell them to the public. Just start out with the thought that your coming attractions are BIG pictures and put them over that way. You'll soon find out for yourselves what I believe to be true.

Hollywood is striving to "deliver the goods," you must strive to make them click at the box office.

"Florodora Girl" Offered Martin a Chance for Stunts

The gay old days were brought back again for a short time when Gil Martin, manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Sterling, Illinois, set out to merchandise "The Florodora Girl" in a manner that would pep up the interest of his town in the shows this theatre was offering to the local public.

He arranged a "Do You Remember When" tie up with the local Cadillac agency who obtained an old 1902 model cadillac which was placed in front of the theatre for two days in advance of the playdate. Card copy and cut-outs tied up with the picture, and the copy on the contest was to the effect that those guessing the year that the car was made, would be entitled to free tickets to see "The Florodora Girl" as the guest of the Cadillac distributor. In addition to this, Martin had special circulars printed with copy on the contest which were distributed from the theatre.

Arrangements were also made with the Sterling Gazette to run a series of style pictures, depicting the fashions of the "Gay Nineties." Each day, for three days, fashion pictures appeared with comparisons of the modern mode of ladies' attire.

Another tie-up arranged by Martin, was with the Radcliffe Drug Stores. Window displays of bathing caps and accessories appeared with stills of the old fashioned bathing costumes from the production. Window cards called attention to "The Florodora Girl" at the Lincoln Theatre.

This display attracted a good deal of favorable comment from passerbys and it also received a word of praise from the dealer who found that more interest was being taken in his merchandise than usual. And when people stop to look, it's a pretty sure thing that they are going to buy and that may have been the reason why the dealer and Martin reported a business boom.

File This One Away It May Prove Handy For Next Summer

With a $50,000 cooling plant being installed in his house, it was an occasion for great rejoicing on the part of George D. Bickford, manager of the Fort Theatre in Rock Island, Ill.; so what better way could he show his jubilation than by turning out a campaign that would have the residents holding their breath.

Two weeks in advance, he placed a 23-foot panel strip over the entrance doors in the lobby, copying read, "$50,000 weather making plant now being installed." And on opening day, the 23-foot strip was moved outside with copy somewhat changed, "$50,000 weather making plant now in operation."

The Curtiss Flying Service of Moline donated an aeroplane to drop 2,000 heralds over the city at noon on opening day. The heralds carried copy about the new cooling system as well as that 50 persons would be admitted free if they found the heralds containing, "Fort Cooled by Refrigeration." The free admissions were good only between the hours of 4 and 5 on the following Monday.

On Saturday afternoon and evening, an usher was on the streets wearing a straw hat and a fur coat. He handed out small cards on which was printed, "This is the new uniform of the ushers at the Publix-Fort Theatre. The new $50,000 ice plant causes it."

A full page of co-operative ads broke in the paper on opening day of operation of new cooling plant. All these ads made some reference to the new cooling plant with the theatre's ad occupying the upper center of page with more copy about the cooling plant.

The papers also contributed several stories on the installation of the new cooling plant, which further helped to publicize the big event.

Cycle Endurance Test Latta's Contribution to Town

Flag pole sitting, tree perching, air endurance, roller skating and marathon dancing tests have captured the fancy of our fickle public. Reams and reams of publicity are being accorded the intrepid persons participating in the cuckoo fads; so what was more natural than that the showmen of the world cash in on them. Which is precisely what C. J. Latta, managing director of the Roger Sherman Theatre in New Haven, Conn., did.

Wishing to introduce a unique stunt in New Haven, Latta hit upon the novel idea of a bicycle riding endurance contest. Fine! But who was to sponsor it? This question did not remain unanswered for long; for being a good showman, Latta decided that his best and most advantageous method of publicizing the contest would be to tie-up with one of the local newspapers. No sooner said than done. The tie-up was made, the paper agreeing to sponsor it and furnish the riders for the gruelling grind from their mailing department.

Four of the paper's representatives were entered. The stunt caught on like wildfire and in a very short time all New Haven was buzzing with excitement occasioned by the introduction of something they had never before seen. The local paper, with whom Latta tied up, furnished the riders with special "costumes," in the form of white canvas bags to be donned over the shirts. The bags were imprinted with the name of the theatre and the newspaper. Every day the paper devoted a front page story to the stunt and in this manner Latta received valuable space at no cost to his house. In fact, he is still receiving it—as we understand that the contest is still going on.

And now for another of this live-wire's activities. Every year the local paper crusades for subscriptions to their fresh air fund. This year Latta tied it in with his silver anniversary and arranged to present the paper with a certain portion of the receipts, taken in during a designated period. In order to secure some publicity, he arranged to have a mammoth money order, which we are showing in the photo, presented to the executive editor of the paper by the mayor's private secretary. Two Western Union messengers were required to carry the check. The papers took pictures of the event and ran them, giving the theatre name a fine break.

This sort of work could put houses over in any part of the country and we know that in passing accounts of it along, Latta's fellow members and managers are very glad to see what he is doing and utilize the ideas.

Shadow Boxes Are Weekly Attractions At Miller's House

The use of shadow boxes seem to be coming back stronger than ever. For a time we noticed that they seemed to slump. Theatre managers who had often used them. discontinued them for a time to devote their energies to something else; but not F. J. Miller, who turns one out for nearly every film that plays his house, the Imperial Theatre in Augusta, Ga. The one he constructed for "Romance" was a corker.

The shadow box was in the form of a treasure box placed on a table and artistically draped. In the box was placed a faded rose, lace kerchief, addressed letters and a photo. A small neat framed card placed to one side was worded, "ROMANCE with Greta Garbo—Aug. 25-29." The treasure box display was illuminated by a small amber baby spot and attracted lots of attention.

Personal Message Works Well for R. L. Nellis Also

We have often commented upon the value of a personal letter now and then to your patrons. We have stated that this serves to bring them closer to your theatre and establishes for the house that feeling of intimacy towards which every showman strives. A new angle to the personal letter or personal endorsement slant has come to light with the weekly bulletin that R. L. Nellis, manager of the Von-Ritz Theatre in Bedford, Indiana, uses to plug his attractions.

The letter is made up in an intimate style and carries comments on the various pictures which are to play during the coming week. Nellis keeps it pepped up by adding comedy slants as well as straight to it. In addition to discussing the picture he also devotes a special foot-note to any items of more than ordinary interest. In this case he was plugging his family night and as an inducement he offered free admission to all children when accompanied by their parents.

If you are using a personal letter now it may be useful to you to look over the lay-out of it and see whether you are injecting enough touches to make it hold interest. If so, you know that you have something that is helping your shows along, if not, it's easy to change it. And if you're not using this personal letter angle we should say that you give it a little thought and figure out whether using it would benefit you, because, after all, you're the only one capable of judging, you're right there on the field and know your local problems better than we do. Oke?

DISTINCTIVE ADS.

So many of Frank Hill's ads have been passed along to you and commented upon that we decided to let these two speak for themselves. Study them carefully and you can easily pick out the most salient features in the layout. Note his localized copy in "The Dawn Patrol," his plug on shorts, his service plug, his plug on "Good News"—then switch to "Romance" and pick out the many deft touches that have been imparted to it, touches that can be made only by one skilled in show craftsmanship. Commercial advertising is one thing, theatrical advertising another. Can you compare Hill's ads with some of the ads advertising nationally known products? Dope it out. It's an interesting game; and a profitable one. And you'll get plenty of surprises.

Chocolate Layer Cake Sold "Mammy" For William Burns

Through a tie-up with his local bakery, William T. Burns, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Roslindale, Mass., was enabled to effect a novel stunt as part of his campaign on "Mammy."

The bakery baked a huge cake weighing 19¾ pounds and was 5 inches thick, 30 inches long and 15 inches wide. It was covered with a dark chocolate frosting on which were the head and hands of Al Jolson—done in white frosting, and was called the "Mammy Cake." The cake was placed in the bakery window, surrounded by many stills of the picture, and a 22 x 28 card which carried copy relative to a guessing contest. To the fifteen persons nearest estimating its correct weight, a guest ticket to see the picture was given.

The cake guessing contest was further advertised by the distribution of 3,000 cards on which appeared copy about the picture, theatre and playdates, as well as detail information about the guessing contest. 1,000 of these cards were distributed by the bakery and the balance by the theatre. The window display drew much attention and the contest proved to be a decided novelty and did much to help business during an extremely hot spell.

And when a stunt is able to do that it must have value. So, we shoot it along in the event that any of the Club members might have a spot for it. We want to thank Burns for passing this along to us and we hope that he will be represented many more times in the future on our pages.

Tie-Up with Local Club Was Gag That Clicked for Cohen

When one of his local organizations, the Union Pacific Athletic Club, decided to hold a beauty contest recently, Irving Cohen, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Grand Island, Nebraska, declared himself in and arranged for the winner and runner-up to make a personal appearance at his theatre on what is ordinarily an off-night.

In return for this, a percentage of the receipts on this night were turned over to the Union Pacific Athletic Club, to help defray the expenses of the winner and her chaperone to Ogden, Utah, where she entered in the national finals with 44 other contestants from as many cities. The members of the U. P. Athletic Club sold tickets for the benefit show, which resulted in a total revenue to the theatre of more than double their average night's receipts.

In addition to the bathing beauty girls, the U. P. Athletic Club arranged for the U. P. band to appear on the stage of the theatre. Manager Cohen made arrangements for two girl tap dancers and a 14-year-old boy specialty dancer to appear on the same bill. In the stage program, the bathing beauty girls modeled dresses from a local department store, adding to the entertainment.

The cost of the entire stunt was very small and in view of the fact that business that night was more than doubled, Cohen was well pleased with the expenditnre. He is always pulling stunts of this sort, and rarely a week goes by when he does not have his house in some thing or other. We are glad to note that this showman is active as usual and we hope to hear more of his work in the near future.

Mahoney Used Some Good Ones to Sell Town on Picture

A practical and an economical campaign was used by W. H. Mahoney, manager of the Strand Theatre, in New Orleans, La., to sell "The Man From Wyoming."

A special treatment of the lobby front, carried out with artificial flowers on the arbor work and art work in the form of hearts, was the scheme followed to emphasize and give special feminine appeal.

A tie-up with a golf links in a suburban town resulted in their displaying a two-yard cloth sign advertising the pictures as well as offering guest tickets to the lowest scores on special nights.

Another tie-up with a miniature golf course in another suburban town resulted in their displaying a marker week to week with an interchangeable slide on which the attraction was billed weekly. And those making a hole-in-one were given a guest ticket to see the current attraction.

A tie-up with a dance club to feature a Strand night with guest tickets being given to holders of lucky numbers was also effected. Announcements were made on this particular evening at different intervals about the current attraction at the Strand. And a three-sheet panel was displayed in the entrance lobby.

These few stunts, which form a part of the selling of every new attraction at the theatre came through nicely and Mahoney managed to turn in a creditable week, attracting a few extra dollars as a result of the tie-ups. As he is one of our active members, and is represented on our pages often we are sure that we will have more of his work to pass along soon. And make it real soon, "W. H.," because, you know, the rest of the Club likes to see what you are doing.

Here's What Bevel, A New Member, Is Doing In His Town

Here's the latest southern showman to join. L. W. Bevel is the manager of the Princess Theatre in Harriman, Tenn., and to prove that he is going to be a very active member he has sent us in a photo of some of his recent display pieces on "With Byrd at the South Pole."

Besides handling the house, Bevel also finds time to be his own artist and his skill with the brush has made his work an object of considerable comment, particularly since it affords the town an opportunity to view some real stuff instead of a lot of lithographs as is sometimes necessary when posters do not arrive on time for the showman in a small town.

Another excellent effect was achieved by Bevel in the display piece for "Hit the Deck" which may also be seen in the photo. Besides turning out the weekly displays, he also created a very cool atmospheric front, plugging the coolness and comfort of the house. Icicles and other special cut-outs, painted in cooling colors, lent an excellent tone and appearance to the front.

Mr. Bevel tells us that he is one of the youngest managers in the state, being only 23 years of age. But he is not young in experience. He ran a picture machine for seven years, starting as a reel boy when only 11 years old. For the past five years he has been in the managerial end of the business. We want to welcome him into the Club and we are sure that he is going to be an active member.

Chewing Gum Tie-up Netted Davidson a Load of Publicity

When Will Rogers started to chew that nationally known brand of gum, it was the signal for showmen all over the country to contact with the manufacturers and secure samples for free distribution. So when L. E. Davidson, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Cedar Rapids, Ia., Played Will Rogers in "So This Is London," nothing would do but that he tie-up with the gum company.

The tie-up was effected with the Beech Nut Chewing Gum Co., whereby they furnished the theatre gratis with over 6,000 sticks of chewing gum.

Special die-cut cards were printed and each stick of gum was then inserted in one of these cards.

Copy on the cards read, "A Refreshing Reminder from Will Rogers (The original Chewing Gum Comic) that his greatest laugh producing comedy is 'SO THIS IS LONDON' and is coming for three days Wed., June 25th, to the PARAMOUNT."

These cards were filled by the ushers and distributed to patrons as they left the theatre one week in advance of playdates. Having some left over on the first day of Rogers' picture, they were distributed on the streets and in stores.

A check showed that practically every one read the message on the card before taking the gum out. And when they stop to do that it's a cinch that the picture is going to go across. "And go across it did," says Davidson.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

MEET GEORGE LANDY!

Meet one of the most active showmen on the Pacific Coast, George Landy, director of publicity and exploitation for R-K-O with headquarters at the Orpheum Theatre in Los Angeles.

Landy is no stranger to his fellow members of the Managers' Round Table Club, he having been represented on our pages a number of times prior to this little story, but this is the first opportunity we have had of showing you what he looks like.

George Landy

Well-liked by all of his associates—in fact by everyone with whom he comes in contact—his keen sense of showmanship has won him many friends out on the Coast and has helped him no end in turning out some great stuff. He has been in the show business for a number of years and is thoroughly grounded in and informed on the motion picture game.

As Landy's work has always spoken for itself, we don't have to say anything more. Keep your eye on him and take advantage of some of the angles he uses and passes along.

Sid Davidson Even Used Navy Bulletin Boards to Sell Show

Those showmen fortunate enough to boast Army, Navy and Marine recruiting stations in their towns often find that they have a picture that will fit into a "natural" tie-up, and when they can make these tie-ups are almost sure of dragging in some extra shekels at the box-office of the house.

When "Sid" Davidson of Skip Weshner's division of Warner's New Jersey Theatres, was handed "True to the Navy" to exploit during its run at the Branford Theatre he realized that he had a natural tie-up with a recruiting station. So he started to do a little hustling about the town. He was seen to dodge in and out of the recruiting headquarters, carrying mysterious packages under his arm. He would duck from the recruiting offices to the photographers and then back again. Finally the result became apparent in the special A boards that blossomed forth one morning.

In the photo we are showing you can see what he did to keep Clara "True to the Navy." His special enlargement of the Clara Bow picture, obtained at small cost, was placed on eighteen boards throughout the city. Alongside each of these boards photostatic enlargement of a message from the "it" girl to the commander of the Naval Recruiting Station at Newark, was placed. The message plugged Clara's opinion of the Navy and it also plugged the picture. Of course, there's always some one who will remark that just how long Clara will remain "True to the Navy" is another thing, because one can never tell when the sunburn thatched siren will go "Aeronautical," but that's not up to us to judge. All we have to do just now is to pass along Sid's stunt in the event that any of our members might be able to use it and we know that at least they are glad to see what the other fellow is doing to put his show across, and especially since the showman in question is noted as an exploiteer.

Harry L. Kaufman Gives Us Some Dope On His Show Career

In response to our request for a little dope concerning his show career, Harry L. Kaufman, manager of the Empire Theatre in Parnell, Mo., let us in on the know.

He has been in the show game for a number of years, starting as slide operator—a position which many showmen will remember, due to the fact that they too served in a similar capacity. After working for a time in this position he was set to rewinding reels and doing other work about the booth. After a year or so in the booth, he was set to work posting bills and taking care of the window cards. As time passed he was given more things to attend and shortly was placed in charge of nearly all the advertising. A number of years later he was made a partner in the house that he is now at; and to-day he owns it.

He tells us that a stunt which went over well for him was a corn-eating contest in which the only participant was a hungry rooster. As patrons came into the theatre they were presented with a slip of paper on which they were supposed to put their guess as to the quantity of corn which the rooster could consume. One thousand grains were placed before the rooster and he ate 456 of them. The first, second and third nearest correct answers submitted were given awards. Another stunt that went over well was run in conjunction with "Noah's Ark"; but you can use it on almost any picture you care to. Children under twelve years of age who could write all of the Ten Commandments were presented with free tickets. The parents and the churches were very enthusiastic over the stunt, and Kaufman grabbed off a flock of good-will.

We want to welcome him into the Club and also thank him for passing these along to us. And remember, Harry, we want to hear from you often concerning your show-selling out in Parnell.

Harry W. Rice Was Presented with a Gift on Retirement

Civic contacts, so we have said time and again, are perhaps one of the most valuable assets a showman can have; so when we receive an account like this one, which tells what Harry W. Rice, manager of the Saenger Theatre in Meridian, Miss., has been doing along these lines, we hasten to present it.

Rice, whose term as President of the Meridian Rotary club recently expired, was honored at a recent meeting by the gift of a "prize package" in the form of a beautiful past President's lapel button and much praise from his colleagues. Dr. Little, speaking on behalf of the club, presented him with the Rotary button and expressed the admiration and appreciation of the members of Mr. Rice's service during the past year. Other members of the club gave vent to their feelings with many laudatory remarks.

Rice responded briefly but sincerely, stating that he had not accomplished as much during his term of office as he had hoped to, and concluded by thanking the members for their co-operation and the expression of their esteem.

And it was a sure thing that having once obtained their confidence, Rice was going to keep it. And in order that we may show your fellow members how well you are handling your job Harry, how about some of your recent work for publication on our pages?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

LOOKING OVER THE FIELD WITH "CHICK"

DULUTH, Minnesota and Superior, Wisconsin, are so closely related to each other (but not TOO closely???) that they are often thought of in the same breath. In fact, one might even venture the opinion that the showmen in those two cities are just like (??) brothers; only that would be stretching things a little too far.

So, in launching any propaganda (not a bad word for the occasion) about Duluth and Superior, we start off by saying that there are two important things to keep in mind. First: the showmen who get paid to practice the none-to-gentle art of showmanship; and second: what they have to boast about in that neck of the woods.

LET'S see. Starting with the showmen themselves, we find Morris Rosenthal. The other boys must pardon our placing Morris (better known as Moisha) at the head of the list. But then, they may not know that Duluth and Morris have always been synonymous as far as this humble correspondent is concerned. Then we have genial Al Anson, Harvey Buchanan and not to be forgotton, Gus Carlson. Don't get the wrong idea that all the other boys rate second mention. It's only because we don't know enough about them that we must keep away from dragging them into this, now famous, visit.

Morris hails—or rains—or snows—have it your own way—from New England, New York, Queens and other points east. Lacking all of the noise, high pressure, pep and other applesauce which seems to be the rage among circuits looking for managers, he does possess the knack of running a theatre as it should be run and selling his shows as they should be sold. Maybe I'm wrong, but from lots of indications, the guys who hire managers pay less attention to those two essentials than you would think possible.

BUT "the proof of the pudding is in the eating," sayeth the classics, and who are we that we should argue with the classics? The Lyceum is being run like a real theatre, and Rosenthal is responsible in no small measure for its success. It is not a Roxy nor a Chinese Theatre, but that's not the fault of the boys who run it. But it IS the leading showhouse of the town and they are right upon the top of the list when it comes to good business.

Whenever you think you have a tough house to handle with crowds, drop yourself a line to Morris and he'll tell you about some smart tricks which he successfully engineered in taking care of the overflow. They used to go home or to one of the other theatres, but now they park themselves 'way up on the top of the second balcony at the Lyceum.

HOWEVER, we've said too much about Rosenthal. Let's get on with this masterpiece of literature (no wise cracks solicited), because we want you to meet, via this page, the aforementioned, genial Al Anson. Al is the district manager for the Publix houses up there and, funny as it may sound, he has not heard about all of those cute tricks as practiced by lots of other district managers. He still knows how to stroll into a theatre without giving everyone the impression that he is "snooping" around looking for trouble. In fact, I was handed a jolt when I found out that the managers actually liked to see Al pay them a visit. Gosh, ain't it a crime that other d.m.'s can't follow the same tactics as successfully worked by Anson? Ah me; then showbusiness might be show-business once again.

THEN we take a ride across the bridge and lo, what do we see! Superior Superior. (Play around with that one for a while, Harvey.) And when you see Superior it is only a matter of minutes before you see Harvey Buchanan and the rest of the showmen of that city. And do you like hospitality? Well, grab the first train and let Harvey show you the works. They will play host for you until you hate like hell to say good-bye. All of which proves that I'm anxious to stop off there again.

And soon after seeing Harvey you ought to meet Gus Carlson. Gus has showmanship down to a science, and when we say science, we mean nothin' else but. Maybe it's just a little shootin' gallery that he is responsible for, but to Gus it's the whole show-world. And in spades, too.

IT WAS rather an innovation, or I should say, revelation, to look over the houses in Superior and Duluth. They might be classed as "different" many ways, not that we would want to undertake an analysis, but—well, you have to hang around them a little while to really appreciate what we are talking about. Try it and see.

And, believe it or not, someone actually recognized me from my pictures in the NEWS. Feature that one, boys. Especially those of you who told me that they could never believe the picture was anything like my face. But then, cameras can be flattering. I got the breaks in this case.

AS FOR the many other interesting sidelights to our stop-off at these cities, about the most outstanding was the arrangement whereby we slept in the hotel and grafted our meals from none other than "Molly." And can Molly cook? Um-mm-mm. How we did enjoy our first home cooked meal is nobody's business. Just try trotting around the country for nine weeks and see if a real meal don't tempt you beyond words. It's not a bit nice to do so, but if you are in Duluth and hungry, just let Molly know that you are on your way and you'll sure get a royal welcome and plenty to eat. What? Who is Molly? Just Morris' missus!!!!

WE CAN honestly say that exploitation, as we witnessed some of it in Duluth, leaves little to be desired. They were just getting ready for "Manslaughter" and not a stone was left unturned to let the whole town know about it. Police traffic signs had been arranged for and were to carry gags about crime—the law—and prison. Police officials were tied right in with the picture, newspaper campaigns were all ready to shoot, and altogether, it looked like the town was in for an interesting week of excitement. No question in my mind that it played to capacity business. You'll be reading all about the details of this campaign in an early issue of the Club pages. Watch for it. You won't be sorry.

We also liked the manner in which the opening of the other Publix house was being handled. Neat, dignified announcements were the keynote of the advance propaganda, and it must have been attracting attention because we hear it talked about on several occasions.

This is the final article in the series. Other items pertaining to the trip will appear, from time to time, in future issues of the Club pages.

AND here again we had to admit that a personal touch to the theatre's advertising could be made mighty profitable when handled in the right way. Don't lose sight of that angle ,boys. It is being neglected in my humble opinion. Don't give the cash customers the high hat or the cold shoulder. They like to know, and talk to, the manager of their local theatres. Make them acquainted with your name and who you are, but do it in a way that doesn't smatter of personal ballyhooing. That will only spoil the whole works and leave the impression that you think you are too good for them.

BEFORE taking leave of this pair of interesting cities, we would like to address one wee little bit of advice to those boys who are operating theatres all over the United States and who come from New York. DON'T, please don't bring your New York manners or methods into the towns or cities where you go. They don't seem to work out. And the natives are not inclined to take kindly to those boys who keep reminding the population at large that they come from New York. Funny angle that. But we've seen enough to convince us that many a good man will meet his Waterloo if he doesn't forget where he came from. Just pay attention to where you are now. That's what counts these days.

After three enjoyable days we took our leave for Chicago. That is not where we were supposed to be heading for, but Club headquarters has had a distress signal out for over a week and it is important that we get back to the big town. So we must pass up the many spots in eastern Canada and jump right home. We do expect, however, to make Jack Allen's town and a few others sometime in October on a short trip from New York. In fact, we are going to make it a most important part of our fall plans.

IN CHICAGO we lingered for only twenty-four hours, and of course, twelve of them were spent with Hal Young. On the tail-end of a trip covering as many miles as we covered, we rested up and now we find ourselves back at the old desk and caressing the lousy old typewriter once more. But as the saying goes "no matter where you go, you love to get back home." Well, that's how we feel. We had a hell of a fine trip. Met many a fine showman. Made lots of new friends for the Club and renewed acquaintances with lots of old ones.

But most important of all, we had the important opportunity of seeing how things are done in other parts of the United States and Canada, and if we are to please an audience as widespread and critical as ours, then we must have an insight on every slant of the business. We've just had. And we now realize that what may be good advice for one side of the country is not so hot for the other side. Therefore, we will try to keep the whole layout in mind when we have anything to pass along to the thousands of members and readers of our Club pages.

FROM time to time, in the immediate future, we shall dwell on some of the outstanding points which attracted our attention during this trip. We also have some interesting snap-shots that we will publish once in a while from along the line.

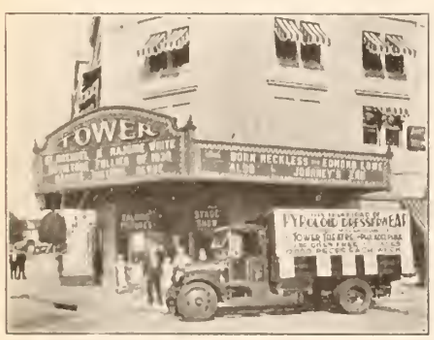
To those of you many boys who helped make this trip so pleasant and enjoyable. I will close with my sincere thanks. I'll do as much for each and every one of you if you ever get into New York.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

TOM OLSEN TRANSFERRED

Now located in Washington, D. C., at the Fox Theatre, it is our idea that Tom Olsen, former publicity director for the upstate division of the Fox circuit, who is now functioning as publicity director of the Fox, will certainly turn out some mighty fine showmanship.

Tom Olsen



Olsen is associated at the house with Hardie Meakin, former publicity chief, but now manager; and with the contacts that Meakin enjoys in the city, coupled with the energy and zest that Olsen displayed in the past, there's no reason why the showman guns shouldn't do plenty of booming in the nation's capital.

This assignment is in the nature of a promotion for Olsen, who, instead of having to look after a group of houses, can now concentrate on the one. Nearly all of our members are familiar with the work of this live-wire and know that he is capable of turning out some showmanship that will stand up with anything of its kind in the country. We want to congratulate him on his new position and let him know that we expect to hear from him very soon, with some angles that will be of value to his fellow showmen and members of the Round Table Club.

"Specialty Night" Aided Von Tilzer's Business Building

Remember the box we ran not so long ago stressing the fact that business could be built up through the medium of presents for the ladies in the form of silverware, dresswear and other things to delight the females. Here's the way Jack Von Tilzer, manager of the Tower Theatre in Philadelphia, set out to let the people know that he was going to give something away at his house.

Some smart showmanship is seen in the move whereby the copy on the truck, which came all the way from Athol, Mass., to Philadelphia, reads: "This Truckload of Pyroloid Dresserware from Athol, Mass., for Tower Theatre-Philadelphia to be given free to ladies, 12,000 pieces each week." While this angle did not help Von Tilzer so much when the truck was speeding toward Philly, it certainly did help him when it hit the neighborhood of the theatre. If you look closely you will notice that special window cards are placed alongside of the truck, under the banner. These cards were inserted in the windows of the local stores and they served to inform many people of the treat to be given them.

A number of showmen are cashing in on this angle to-day. It may be dresswear, silverware, novelties,—many forms of merchandise; but it seems to be a pretty sure thing that if some form of merchandise is being handed out free to the ladies, business is going to boom. If you are using an angle of this sort you can tell, better than we, what its value is. If you think you'd like to try something like it, dope out your local situation and if the answer is favorable don't be afraid to shoot the works on it.

Atmospheric Front At Emerson's House Had Public Talking

Hitting the horizon of Des Moines, Ia., with atmospheric fronts seems to be one of the showman habits often indulged in by Ted Emerson, manager of the Strand Theatre for Publix.

Whenever he plays a picture that enables him to go out and promote accessories to make his display one that would attract attention any place and at any time, Ted certainly steps out to do it. So when he played "Hunting Tigers in India" he hustled about town and promoted a lot of hunting trophies to be placed on display in front of the theatre. The photos we are showing will prove how completely the job was done.

In his entire display, he tried not to overlook a single angle that would have them gazing long enough to sell them. Skins of wild beasts were placed about. Stuffed lions, tigers, jaguars and wild cats were used. If you look closely you can notice the beautiul mounting of a stuffed wildcat that is placed in the case especially promoted for the display. On top of the case an elephant's hoof was placed. From morning till night the front of the house was jammed by persons eager to get a look at the trophies from the jungles.

Besides this corking display, many other angles were used and these included school tie-ups and slants of like nature. Since we know that Ted is one of Des Moine's ace showmen we can feel sure that every angle that would help towards the success of the picture was called into play by him and that when the check up was made at the box office he knew that his showmanship has not been in vain.

This is the sort of work he is always turning out and we hope, since we know he wants to be active, that he will pass along some more of it to us so that we can let the rest of the Club see what he is doing. Oke, Ted?

Here's Some New Ads from Bair That Carry a Big Wallop

To E. E. Bair, manager of the State Theatre in East Liverpool, Ohio, the new season meant that he would be able to effect a few new stunts in conjunction with the new type of feature film which the producers offer as this year's product from Hollywood.

His first of the new season, "Night Work," gave him an opportunity to insert a novel ad in the local newspaper that would pack a mighty wallop—powerful enough to bring them to the box office in droves. In the lay-out that we are showing you can see this ad. He heads it: "We challenge you, Kate Cameron." As nearly every patron of the theatre knows Kate Cameron, she being Liberty magazine's motion picture critic, and a nationally known one, this angle was doubly effective. Seeing the name of the critic, the reader of the paper would take time to look the ad over, and, as in this particular case, they know Bair as a showman who knows his pictures, they would be more than eager to get to the theatre and see for themselves whether or not he was right in contesting the opinion of the magazine critic. This is an angle that is worth remembering. You don't have to agree right to the dot with what a critic says; he, not being capable of covering the entire country, must dope out what he believes the public wants; he doesn't know what each individual town may want; he has to take the country at large. Get the point? If you can see a picture before it plays your house, you can get a good line on it, and, knowing your public, you'll know best how to sell it.

We would also like to call your attention to the two "Holiday" ads, the uniqueness of make-up which you will notice is its most salient and most effective selling point. In one Bair has used a personal message and in the other, simplicity is the keynote. Also in the lay-out you will notice his tribute to Lon Chaney that was inserted in the local papers. A good many showmen, all over the world, paid their respects, in this manner, to one of the greatest artists who ever put on make-up.

While we are on the subject of Bair's newspaper advertising we'd like to tell you about the special full-page co-operative ad he secured on Clara Bow's film, "Love Among the Millionaires" in which he also incorporated a novel contest. A cut of the star was placed in every ad, while all around the border of the page the word "It" was used. A notice in the ad invited the readers to count the numbers of "Its" and send them in to the editor of the paper. The first 20 correct answers were presented with free tickets to witness the film. The drawing power of the advertising was seen in the seven hundred replies that poured into the newspaper office. The replies, of course, pleased the merchants immensely and the same stood for the newspaper editors, with the subsequent result that Bair's good-will stock went up still higher. And he has so much of it now that we wonder when he will ever stop grabbing it; but just the same we know he is going to continue the same live-wire work and keep us posted on it.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK
Oct. 5th to 11th

Here is a "natural" tie-up, carrying with it plenty of good-will angles and a chance to get your local fire department ballyhooing the theatre while selling the community on the importance of Fire Prevention.

Get behind it one hundred percent. Signs all over the town. Prevention reels are available, either to you direct or through the fire department. Prominent civic leaders should be solicited by the fire chiefs to make short addresses from your stage.

Parade of fire apparatus, scouts, etc., are all in order. It's a worthy cause for you and your theatre to champion, and it will leave a lasting impression on both your patrons and the city authorities.

But—

Be sure that you practice what you preach. A "Clean Up" of your own theatre is just as important and should cover all of those rubbish piles that accumulate so easily in the boiler room, closets, handing ceiling and roofs.

Designate a specific morning and have every man on your payroll on the job. Box office included. Get your local papers to give you a news break setting forth how your theatre is observing preparations for Fire Prevention Week by eliminating unnecessary hazards within your building.

Ballyhoo it. Plug it. Talk about it. Attract attention to it.

GET BUSY. TIME IS SHORT.

Girl Pinned Roses On Lapels of the Waco Pedestrians

If you were walking along the streets of Waco, Texas, or sitting peacefully at a desk and a young lady walked up to you and pinned a rose on your coat, it's ten chances to one that you'd rub your eyes to see whether or not you were dreaming. But a moment later you'd realize that it was only another example of the showmanship of J. P. Harrison, manager of the Waco Theatre, and that the stunt was part of his ace campaign on "Vagabond King."

The roses were furnished gratis by a local florist; he in turn receiving a credit line on the slip of paper attached to the stem of the rose. A very attractive young lady was called upon to visit the leading business men of the city and then pinned a rose on their coats. And while doing this unusual job, the girl was spieling off a line of chatter saying that "Only a Rose" was one of the beautiful songs to be heard in "The Vagabond King."

In addition to the credit line about the florist on the slip of paper attached to the stem of the rose, there was also, "The beautiful theme song, ONLY A ROSE OF VAGABOND KING comes to the Waco Theatre Friday."

The rose stunt created a lot of talk among the leading merchants as well as those in their employ. At any rate, it helped to popularize the picture to excellent results.

Another stunt that deviated somewhat from the usual procedure was the distribution of 5,000 heralds by girls who were attired in natty uniforms of blue. This stunt added a little more personal touch than the other way and made some people more eager to get one of the heralds.

These few stunts of Harrison's aided him considerably in making new box-office records and we are of the opinion that he is constantly striving to break every new one he creates. Are we right, "J. P."? You know the only way we can tell is to see your work frequently.

Local Band Aided Winham in Plugging South Pole Film

Taking it all in all, we think that Alexandria, La., must have been mighty appreciative of the street parade that H. C. Winham, manager of the Rapides Theatre treated it to in conjunction with his showing of "With Byrd at the South Pole," especially since it's much easier to stand in the shade and watch a parade go by, instead of being in the parade and marching in the hot sun.

The parade went through the business section—carrying banners reading, "We are on our way to see WITH BYRD AT THE SOUTH POLE. How about you?" Also copy to the effect that one of the men that accompanied the expedition was a Boy Scout. This was rather appropriate copy inasmuch as most of the parade consisted of Boy Scouts.

The parade was led by the Publix Sound Train, which carried in addition to its regular means of advertising two large banners containing practically the same copy as was carried by the Scouts in the parade.

Following the Sound Train came the Orphanage Band from the Masonic Temple numbering 25 pieces. The scouts, following this, totaled about 125 in number. The orphans were admitted gratis, but the balance of the boys paid ten cents. A lot of good will was created on the low admission price.

The newspaper gave the parade an excellent break and also commented on the film. The story hit the front pages, and when things like that happen, it proves to Winham that he certainly knows his town. And when you know it like that, "H. C.," we feel that you are turning out plenty of good work and we hope to have more of it in the near future to pass along to the Club.

Earle Oscar Is Still On the Go Selling His Shows in Athens

You'll have to agree with us that Earle Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Athens, Ala., doesn't waste any of his time in selling his shows. It seems to us that he works morning, noon and night, doping out the many ideas he uses in his town.

As the completion of one of his recent serials, on the concluding chapter, he made up a special herald and distributed it about the town, making a play for the adults as well as the kids. The herald, printed in black and white on coarse stock paper, was devoted almost entirely to the new serial, the first installment of which was to be shown on the same day as the final release of his old serial. In addition to this, the herald carried announcement of the Western feature picture, in which the theme songs received a plug and a thumb nail cut of the star enhanced the lay-out, together with a notice of the Laurel and Hardy comedy. The herald ended with the effective catchline "4 big attractions in 1."

Oscar, as the herald showed, evidenced a great deal of care in its make-up, being sure that cuts were placed in the right places and positions to attract the eye, which, you will also agree, is paying strict attention to business, as he is not situated in any ideally favorable location for a world beating display of showmanship, handicapped as he is by the lack of exchanges near him and forced to depend almost entirely on the mail and the film delivery; so the showmanship he is turning out is a credit to his ability. We are very glad to pass along accounts of what he is doing and we are sure that we will hear more from him in the near future.

G. Banniza Passes One Along That You Can Use on Films

This is just one of the ways that G. P. Banniza, manager of the Princess Theatre in Decatur, Alabama, sells the town on the attraction he is offering.

From the photo you'll be able to see what he did to sell "The Saturday Night Kid." He adopted an idea that was used in connection with another picture and put it to use with the one he was plugging. A cut-out of Clara Bow was placed in a bath tub and covered with a sheet. In the evening a large light placed at the back of the display and the silhouette that it revealed was startling enough to make them stand and look.

While we are passing this stunt along we would like to bring to your attention that this is another example of why you needn't feel that every picture must necessarily have special stunts. A good gag will click on almost any picture no matter how many times you use it. If you think back to the first time that this girl in the bathtub gag was used you'll see that Banniza is of the same opinion as we. We want to thank him for keeping us posted on his work and we look forward to receiving the future contributions he promises us.

O'Donnell Grabbed Free Space on the Classified Ad Page

Still another showman makes use of a stunt that his fellow members have found to be of great value, and touches it up with a little original idea of his own. Since this took place in Baton Rouge, La., it stands to reason that the showman is none other than G. E. O'Donnell, popular manager of the Columbia Theatre.

Both the morning and evening newspaper planted a three-column by eight-inch ad showing two large heads of Dolores Del Rio and Edmund Lowe—the principals in the picture.

The caption at the top of the pictures in the ad was, "If you were this popular couple," and then underneath the pictures, "And were planning to live in Baton Rouge." And then followed, "You could easily find a suitable apartment by using a classified ad," etc.

Further copy in the ad revealed that 50 free tickets were to be given away to the first 25 persons inserting an apartment or room ad for three or more days and paying cash for same—two tickets to each of the 25 persons to see Dolores Del Rio in her latest picture, "The Bad One."

A brief underneath the pictures in small print told the readers that this was a scene from "The Bad One" with Dolores Del Rio and Edmund Lowe, coming to the Columbia theatre on Tuesday, June 24, for three days.

We are glad to note that "G. E." is keeping up his ace work, despite the competition Old Man Heat is trying to offer, and we know that he is going to keep us in touch with his future efforts to keep the house on the winning side of the ledger.

Graham Jeffries Is Fashioning Some Good Display Fronts

As we know that a good many of our members are interested in looking at front and lobby displays, and feeling that this one created by Graham Jeffries, manager of the Fotosho Theatre in Miami, Fla., contains a few helpful angles we are passing it along.

Beaverboard was used quite extensively in constructing the lobby display. Both sides of the entrance giving a front view were covered by beaverboard containing stills from the picture and copy relative to stars and sales copy.

Another piece of beaverboard extended across the top of the entrance joining on either side and forming an archway. On this appeared the title of the picture in large letters.

Both sides of wall in lobby were covered with beaverboard with stills and copy similar to the ones facing the street.

This type of lobby display may be simply constructed at a small cost, about the only thing really necessary being an eye for good layout. And we are sure that should you care to use a slant of this sort, you will more than attract attention with it. We want to thank Jeffries for letting us see this sample of his work and we hope to see some more of them in the future. What do you say, Graham, can we count on you?

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once.

UP IN REGINA

Remember our reference to the "Mounties" and Regina? Well, here we are, your chairman, Mrs. Chick and Dave Borland, proving that the "Mounties" always get their man. In this case two of them "got" us.

This picture was taken at the training camp of the Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted Police, located just outside of Regina, Sask., Canada. Here, anyone lucky enough to get an O. K. to go through, will find one of the finest institutions of its kind anywhere.

Cast your eyes on those two "mounties" in the picture if there is any doubt about the type of men in the service. And after listening to Col. Wesley, in charge of the camp, our respect for them grew plenty. This may not be a "rave" about Joe Oophus' latest exploitation gag or Harry Goophis' knock-out publicity stunt, but it is a "rave" about men who enter into a service which places them in danger spots and at temperatures running anywhere from ten to sixty below zero. And what's more, they come out again into civilization and ask for more. That's stick-to-it-ness in any man's language and we are wondering how many showmen would face the same gaff that these boys are facing and see it through.

Don't all answer at once!!!

Smart Used Automobile Stunt in Window To Attract Attention

When he played "Burning Up," Roy L. Smart, manager of the Broadhurst Theatre in High Point, N. C., arranged with a furniture store which boasted the largest and best located window in the city, for a window display in cooperation with a dealer in a medium-priced car. He wanted to have a live window display, so arrangements were made for the location of a new 1930 model in the window, the car being jacked up and a contest started along with the motor, to determine who could guess the nearest to the mileage the speedometer would show at the end of three days.

This display was arranged to run coincident with his showing of "Burning Up" and was artistically laid out. Crowds stood before the big window every hour of the day and long into the night and nearly 2,000 guesses were submitted.

Awards ranked from a $40 cedar chest down to theatre tickets, eleven in all being awarded. The local paper carried stories daily.

Cost of this stunt to the theatre was 35 cents and increased business considerably.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

SILENT SYRACUSE!

Like Fenimore Cooper's "Last of the Mohicans," the last of Syracuse, N. Y., organists has hit the long, long trail that seems to lead into oblivion. With the lopping off from the payroll of the Eckel Theatre of Paul H. Forster, Syracuse, once a stronghold for organists, now has none.

In the past, Forster made a great name for himself; and he wasn't alone in his glory—there were plenty of other crack organists in the city, too. Then, "Came the Sound." One by one the musicians whose organ specialties had built up the prestige of a house were dismissed. Forster held on valiantly; but now he is gone. Perhaps Syracuse is better off without any organ specialties in the theatre. Yes, perhaps!

Should any one take the trouble to make a survey, he would find that some of the largest, and some of the smallest, houses in the country continue to feature organ solos. The executive brains behind the chains comprising the large houses, and the "Indies" behind the small houses, seem to us to be of one accord in the resolution to "give the public entertainment"; and not cut out drawing cards to save a few dollars.

The patrons of the State always sang lustily. That they enjoyed the organ specialties was evidenced in the applause. Yet the circuit heads said "Thumbs Down."

Who has a moral for the fable? Or is it moral-ess a joke?

Ralph Cokain Keeps The Indiana's Box-Office Jingling

We are always glad to receive these little accounts of what Club members are doing, and pass them on so that their fellow showmen may know that they are active. So here's some on what Ralph Cokain, manager of the Indiana Theatre in Marion, Ind., has been doing to keep his ticket register singing a merry tune.

Cokain sees to it that all of Marion knows that his house is one of the best in the city, and to effect this impression he posts the slogan, "Always a Better Show at the Indiana," all over the town. The slogan is painted on linen and tacked in convenient place—high buildings, walls and poles getting plenty of play. A special 24-sheet board located on one of the main highways carries the current attractions and is sniped "Indiana —of Course." An endless stream of cars and pedestrians pass this most advantageous spot, giving the sign plenty of attention.

We would also like to say a few words about the special front that he constructed for "The Dawn Patrol." Beaverboard formed the main portion of it. The front was made up to resemble a battlefield, with barbed wire, crashing planes and the other familiar war scenes lending a realistic touch to the attractively colored picture. The front created considerable comment and the word-of-mouth talk that resulted helped to boost business up still higher during the run of the film.

Thanks, Ralph, for letting us see that you are as active as ever down there. We'd like you to know that we are always glad to pass your work along to the rest of the Club and we hope to hear from you again very soon, with some more ways to build up good-will and the box-office. And we'd like to hear from the rest of the showmen on your circuit, too.

"Novelty in front displays," was one of the cries we heard on our recent tour across the country. At nearly every stopping point many of our friends would point with pride at the knockout fronts they turned out to plug each new attraction at their houses; and they nearly always asked us why we didn't publish more photos of fronts than we do—though we hastened to assure them that we thought we were publishing enough—since nearly every edition contains a number, but, always willing to oblige, we promised to pick up a few along the way and present them on our pages, and, while we chased over the country, to make notes and observations and request that more be sent to us.

Here's one that Ralph Noble of the Arkansas Amusement Company in Little Rock, Ark., turned out for the showing of "The Dawn Patrol." It's a wow, isn't it? He constructed a plane from beaver board, placed lamps all around it and placed it on the front of the theatre, extending from the roof to the box-office. In the photos we are reproducing you can see how it looks by day and night. It constituted a great flash, as it would be seen from any part of the main street. The finest stunt of its kind ever pulled by the theatre, it attracted comments from everyone seeing it. Considering the vast amount of publicity and word-of-mouth comment received, the cost of construction was trivial. We would like to point out that you too can use a flash of this kind; and at almost any time, since you do not need a "Dawn Patrol" to put it across.

We are rather unfortunate in that we are unable, due to its extreme length, to present a sample of an ad which Mr. Noble forwarded to us; but we hope, at some future date to present a lay-out of his work, as the tone in which the theme is carried out is a very novel one, he believing that a personality shot of the stars with a forceful catchline relative to the nature of the picture is enough to sell the film in Little Rock. As we happen to know that Mr. Noble and his fellow showmen turn out work of this sort week after week we want him to know that we expect to hear from him more often. So let's go, Ralph—give us some more of this work; and keep your eye on the rest of the showmen in your district and tell them that we want to hear from them too.

MODEST MONTY

Although he insists on "hiding his light beneath a bushel," we finally found out that Monty MacLevy, of Sam Rinzler's Fox division, has promoted a marvelous tie-up with a steamship line whereby all the theatres in the division will offer free all-expense trips this winter.

Which in show business is better known as high-powered stuff.

Pardon us if we say "We told you so" about Monty. He IS delivering the goods and riding right along with the best of 'em.

Leslie Wilkes Was Wide Awake; Cashed In On Bow's Visit

Cashing in on some red hot news enabled Leslie Wilkes, manager of the Palace Theatre in Corsicana, Texas, to secure publicity for his house. A short time ago Clara Bow paid a brief visit to Dallas and, of course, the news syndicates all carried the story. Since his town is located but a short distance from Dallas, he felt that as everybody in town knew that Clara Bow was staying there, it would pay to work a gag on it. Accordingly, he made up a personal postcard printed with Clara's signature cut from a mat on another Paramount picture. The cards were mailed in Dallas and reached 1,000 people in Corsicana.

The copy on the cards was especially timely and proved an excellent medium in advertising the picture. The copy: "I have always wanted and intended to visit Mary Brian's home town and visit with her many friends. She has told me of the warm hospitality and about the charming reception extended her while in your city.

"I have overstayed my short vacation in Dallas and must return to work, but I would like for you to see my new picture, 'True to the Navy,' coming to the Palace Theatre, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. I have worked hard on this and believe it to be the best I have ever made. If you should see this picture I would appreciate having your comments. Sincerely, Clara Bow."

The reverse side of the card also showed a cut of Clara Bow with her address printed in small type underneath. The postcard stunt greatly helped to publicize the picture.

And was also the means, if we may say it, of letting the residents of Corsicana know that they have a real live-wire showman in their midst. Keep up your good work, Leslie, and let's have some more accounts of it.

Amusement Park Staged Special Day For Capitol Theatre

A big amusement park, located close by him in Wheeling, West Va., afforded G. B. Odlum an opportunity for tying it up to good advantage and securing reams of publicity for the Capitol Theatre, of which he is the director of publicity, as you know.

He prevailed upon the state fair park official to inaugurate a special "Capitol Theatre Field Day" which was run on a Saturday. The official readily agreed to Odlum's plans and they set out to let all of Wheeling and the surrounding territories, know about the special event. The amusement park management paid for newspaper displays, secured readers, received an eight column headline, hired a street car, appropriately bannered, to go around the city plugging the innovation; every street car in the city carried a card announcement for four days, and the park band was pressed into service.

The only cost to Odlum was 15 passes and half of the cost for printing tickets. In addition to this he also made up tickets, which were distributed at the park, that entitled the bearer to two admissions for the one price at the Capitol. The theatre gave away guest coupons entitling the holder to a free ride on a number of amusement attractions. The entire campaign, capably executed by Odlum, went over very well, with the good-will of the amusement park being gained, plus a couple of scrap books crammed full with free newspaper publicity. All that could be seen at the park for a week was "Capitol." And when they give a house that kind of publicity, the house is bound to clean up.

Crane Is in Solid With Town, So He Makes Great Tie-Ups

Tying up with the largest department store in Daytona Beach, Ed Crane, manager of the Florida theatre, procured the use of an entire window, in which he made a great display of colored photographs of each star in "Paramount On Parade," and offered guest tickets to the first thirty who named each star in the picture correctly.

The stunt was announced in the newspaper advertising of the department store, and received much free space. The huge spread resulted in a flood of letters from participants.

A similar tie-up was made with the Daytona Beach Independent, which used a caricature picture of every star in "Paramount On Parade," offering twenty-five complimentary tickets to the winners as guest of the newspaper on the opening night of the picture.

Another angle that did a lot towards pepping up receipts at the box office was the special front that Crane designed and built. So that you may observe his ingenuity, we are showing a photo of the display in conjunction with this story. He cut out a number of stars and placed their pictures behind the placques to the effect you notice. Two cut-outs of girls engaged in the act of holding up the plug on the picture were prominently displayed.

A great deal of attention was paid to this front and we would like to state that the photo does not do it full justice as there were many little details to it that made the whole effect stand out like nobody's business. There wasn't a place on that front where the title of the picture wouldn't sock you right in the eye.

We know that when Ed turns out work like this he wants to shoot it along to his fellow members in the Round Table Club and when he does, his fellow managers on the Publix circuit will also be kept posted on what he is doing.

PARDON US, TERHUNE!

Through an oversight at Club headquarters we credited William Slater of the Strand Theatre in Plainfield, New Jersey as being manager of the house.

As it was too late to correct the notice before going to press, we want to rectify it this week by letting the whole show world know that Terhune is the Manager and Slater the assistant manager. The two of them combine a marvelous team and we want to hear more from them.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Profitable Plan with His Local Dealer Was Engineered by Catlin

Proving how well he stands with his local dealers, Arthur Catlin, manager of the Allen Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, made a profitable tie-up with a local dealer as part of his campaign for the film current at the theatre, "Let Us Be Gay."

This tie-up was arranged with a local candy company, who furnished two thousand bags of candy daily for the week before the opening. Printed copy on the bags read: "A Greeting from Norma Shearer, who appears next week at Loew's Allen in 'Let Us Be Gay.'" A young lady was employed to distribute the candy to each patron leaving the theatre. A large card in front of the pedestal containing the basket read as follows: "Norma Shearer invites you to try these delicious Newport Creams."

Another interesting tie-up was arranged with the Austin Motors Company, who provided Catlin with one of their small cars with a large banner across the top reading "Norma Shearer, star of 'Let Us Be Gay,' Allen Theatre, says, 'The New Austin Bantam, 'A Car to Run Around In.'" This car was parked in front of the theatre, and also paraded the downtown business streets.

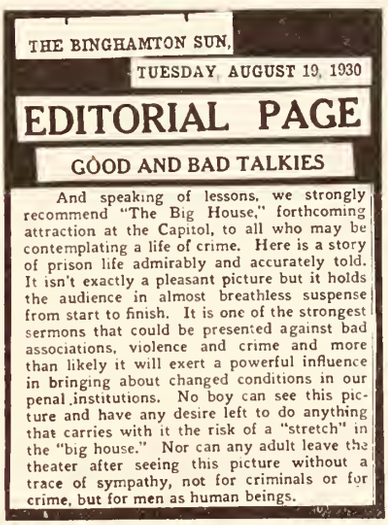
We have been hearing some good accounts of Mr. Catlin's work and we hope that he will keep us posted on it so that we can pass it along to his fellow members. We would also like a photo of him and we hope he will favor us with one when he shoots us in his next contribution.

Hiehle Concentrated On Advertising and It Went Over Well

The new season finds Ed Hiehle, manager of the Midland and the Auditorium Theatres in Newark, Ohio, all set and raring to go; and when Ed is set that way there's certain to be plenty of dust flying around, as past activity has shown.

One of his first activities was on "The Unholy Three" and in order that you may see what he did along the show selling lines for that picture we are reproducing a number of his newspaper ads, which very effectively tell the story.

With capacity business the order of the evening, Hiehle ran the special "We Apologize" box in which he laid stress on the point that business would be so good in the evenings that it would be wise for a great many to attend the matinee or first evening performance. The picture was booked in at about the time of Lon Chaney's death and it was up to Hiehle to lay out new ads for his selling of the picture. In the large ad you will note the special affidavit that he ran. The statement created a lot of word-of-mouth comment, especially since it was also seen in the trailer.



The heading on the ad "Warning" is somewhat similar to the "We Apologize" gag except that it stresses the fact that Midland is being offered its last opportunity to view the star's talking picture. We are also showing, along with this layout, a free ad that Hiehle secured through a tie-up with a local fur merchant. Through the tie-up he was enabled to stage a fur fashion show at the Midland with local talent taking part. The show was a great success from both a monetary and good-will standpoint. To go back to the ads again for a moment, we'd like to point out that Hiehle is missing no opportunity to get in a plug for his shorts and you will note that he is giving them plenty of space.

This type of advertising has long been a feature of his work at the Midland, and has been largely instrumental in the continued good business at the house. We are glad to see that Ed is all ready to give the town some more of the showmanship that has characterized his past efforts; and we are sure that he will continue to be a very active member of the Club.

AN EDITORIAL BREAK!

It has been said that when Frances Marion wrote her original screen story, "The Big House," and also supplied the dialogue, she fully realized the fact that the film would have to be a humanized portrayal of jail life in the raw; and present not only an insight into a felon's existence, but touch also on human nature. The film had to be more than a movie.

EDITORIAL PAGE

GOOD AND BAD TALKIES

And speaking of lessons, we strongly recommend "The Big House," forthcoming attraction at the Capitol, to all who may be contemplating a life of crime. Here is a story of prison life admirably and accurately told. It isn't exactly a pleasant picture but it holds the audience in almost breathless suspense from start to finish. It is one of the strongest sermons that could be presented against bad associations, violence and crime and more than likely it will exert a powerful influence in bringing about changed conditions in our penal institutions. No boy can see this picture and have any desire left to do anything that carries with it the risk of a "stretch" in the "big house." Nor can any adult leave the theater after seeing this picture without a trace of sympathy, not for criminals or for crime, but for men as human beings.

Making its appearance at a time when the world was stunned by news of horrors . . . agonies . . . endured by prisoners in the flame swept Ohio penitentiary . . . the terrible catastrophe that directly followed the series of jail outbreaks . . . by half-crazed convicts . . . the picture immediately became an object of criticism . . . sceptical and caustic newspaper critics and magazine writers the world over . . . fingered their pen poinards and restlessly waited to deliver the death thrust to a film they believed would be "just another movie." The rest is known to showmen. . . .

The Managers' Round Table Club is not concerned with what merit a picture may have . . . we are here to pass along the other fellow's opinions and ideas . . . in the cut we are reproducing you can see what the editor of the Binghamton (N. Y.) Sun thought of "The Big House" . . . and editors all over the country have been expressing similar sentiments . . . but . . . the point we want to bring out is the fact that the showman at whose house the film played . . . advertised it honestly and truthfully . . . as a REAL representation of prison life . . . when the patrons viewed it they were satisfied . . . so were the newspaper editors . . . so much so that they ran the above comment as an editorial . . . when producers and showmen are honest with their advertising . . . and can produce the product they claim to have . . . then will the movies cease to be just "the movies" . . . instead they will . . . as the editorial portends . . . "exert a powerful influence . . ."

Stein Promotes Gifts From Merchants When Business Lags

One showman who never seems to worry about business depression is L. Stein, managing director of the Ritz Theatre in Newark, N. J. When business starts to drop a notch, you will always find him out around the city promoting some sort of merchandise to give away in his theatre, as he has found this to be one of his most effective stunts.

The latest tie-up that he secured was one done in co-operation with the local merchants. He interested 16 dealers in a plan whereby he would give away an Austin car. Each dealer was supposed to give in a part of the money and in that manner enough would be collected to pay for it. The dealers consented to Stein's plan and the Austin was placed on display in the lobby of the theatre, to be given away to some lucky patron. The merchants were given space in the program and in all of the advertising done by the theatre. In return they plugged the stunt in their establishments.

This angle had not been used for some time by Stein and it proved to be a great bet for boosting up business and goodwill, the night of the presentation finding the theatre packed to capacity. Here's an angle that you, too, might care to use, give it a little consideration and, if it will work in with your local condition, use it. Thanks, Stein, for letting us see this one, and let's have some more.

Jazz Band on Truck Effective Medium Used by Bamberger

A red hot jazz band, blowing away at blues tunes of the sort that make you feel what you ain't was one of the most effective mediums that Herman Bamberger, manager of the Kentucky Theatre in Lexington, Kentucky, used to plug his showing of "Paramount on Parade," especially since he saw an opportunity to tie it in with a parade.

The occasion of the parade was the annual May Day parade of the University of Kentucky. These parades are looked forward to every year by the masses; and the merchants, clubs and other organizations as well as the College fraternities try to outdo each other in beautiful floats.

The float of the Kentucky Theatre was rather attractive in that it was decorated with the one idea of publicizing the picture, "Paramount on Parade."

Five musicians occupied the space on the truck over which was a canopy having cut-out stars on the border all the way around. The stars carried the imprint of the stars' names that appeared in the picture. All around the body of the truck were signs carrying copy, "Speaking of Parades—See PARAMOUNT ON PARADE—Kentucky Theatre."

The musicians kept things humming in a musical way to give the picture some splendid advertising. The float was also used before and after the parade so that everybody in town would be sure to know about the picture.

And to show you how he pulls with the local merchants read how he sold a group of them the idea of a misspelled word contest in connection with his exploitation of "Fu Manchu" and secured a co-operative page.

The heading across the top of the co-op page read, "Fu Manchu is Alive!—and if you are alive to the possibilities of this contest you may be one of the winners of 50 guest tickets, etc."

In eight of the nine ads on the co-operative page was a misspelled word. The contestant was required to print plainly opposite a letter in the center column the name of the merchant in whose ad you have used that letter to correct a misspelled word.

The eight letters in the center of the page were those spelling out "FU MANCHU"; the words being so arranged in the ads that the misspelled words would be one of those in the title of picture. The contest stimulated a lot of interest in the picture as well as in the contest itself

By the way, if you think it's an easy matter to sell the merchants in Herman's town, then you're mistaken, because from what we know of it, unless we, too, are way off, those business men want to know what they are going to get out of it. After all so does every one of us. So what?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

WHY DON'T YOU JOIN THESE LIVE-WIRE SHOWMEN?

MILTON H. GROSSMAN is the assistant manager of the Park Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y. As we have published an account of Milton's work on our pages before, you all know that he is a hustler, and it would not surprise us one bit to find him handling his own house in a little while because we happen to know that it takes showmanship to bring them into the house he is now working at under the efficient direction of Dick Ryan handling it.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD H. RICHARDSON is the assistant manager of the Palace Theatre in Indianapolis, Ind., the city where showmanship is always the order of the day (and night, too, for that matter). Working under the capable direction of J. F. Flex, and having a background of the Ohio Theatre in Columbus, Ohio, Edward seems to be in a position to ready himself for a house on his own hook. Keep us posted on what you are doing, Edward, so that we can watch your progress.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ELLIOTT JOHNSON is the manager of the Saenger and Grand Theatres in Hope, Ark. With two houses on his hands, Mr. Johnson is no doubt very busy, but we hope he will find time to sit down and let us know what he is doing to bring them in to the box-office. And when he sends us in his next contribution we would like to find his photo enclosed with it. How about it, Elliott?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PHILIP D. BLOOMBURG manages the Paramount Theatre in Salem, Mass. Mr. Bloomburg has been turning out some good work in his section of the country, and we would like to see some of it, particularly since the New England showmen have proven themselves to be very active. Let's have a look at it Phil, and at the same time shoot us in a photo of yourself.

HERE ARE MORE NEW MEMBERS!

CHARLES S. MICHELSON manages the Colonial Theatre in Pompton Lakes, N. J., and the Butler Theatre in Butler, New Jersey. With two houses to look after, Michelson is kept pretty busy, but we understand he manages to turn in some good showmanship. What do you say, Charlie, let us in on your methods, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. L. MITCHELL is the manager of the Genessee Theatre in Waukegan, Illinois. Having an excellent show background, Mr. Mitchell knows just what sort of work will best click in his town and this method of operation has helped him to keep the house above par week after week. Listen, "J. L." let's have a photo of yourself, will you, so that we can give you a regular introduction?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SIDNEY HOLLAND manages the Paramount Theatre in Hammond, Ind., for the Publix outfit. His town offers many opportunities for him to display his showmanship and Holland more than takes advantage of them. Sidney is going to show this to us by his future work so if you'll just watch his smoke on the pages we believe you will receive some helpful hints.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM EXTON is the manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Muncie, Indiana. It looks to us as though our membership from Exton's state is growing by leaps and bounds. This gives you an opportunity, Bill, to get right upon the top position and hang onto it by your showman ability. Shoot along some stuff to us so that we can pass it on.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MARVIN HARRIS is the manager of the Majestic Theatre in E. St. Louis, Ill. We have never been in Mr. Harris' town but we can recall going through it on a trip to the Middle West a couple of years ago. Since we feel that all towns offer opportunities for showmanship we'd like to see what Marvin is doing along the show lines and we hope he will "wise us up" on the situation.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FLOYD G. NUTTING, whose work we are already acquainted with, is the manager of the State Theatre in Minot, North Dakota. Though he is located in a small town, Nutting, nevertheless is right there with the goods when it comes to plugging his house. And we will show you what we mean in a future issue of the Club pages. Meanwhile, Floyd, how about sending us in a photo and some dope on yourself so that we can present it with your next contribtuion.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HOLLIS DREW manages the Strand Theatre in Lowell, Mich. He has been in the show game for a great many years, starting from the bottom of the ladder and working his way up to manager of a house. Mr. Drew tells us that he is going to try to become a very active member. Oke, Hollis, that's the Club spirit. Let's get going.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES KARR is a district booker for Publix in Phoenix, Arizona. Karr has had a wealth of experience in show business and he shows this by his knowledge of exploitation. He informs us that he is a regular reader of our pages and that he sees many friends of his represented there. We want to welcome him into the Club and we hope that he will have something of interest for us shortly.

EARLE A. STANZ is the manager of the Penn Theatre in Royersford, Pa. Mr. Stanz has been turning out some good work in his town, and though the town doesn't permit a too great variety of showmanship, he is going to let us see what he is doing to keep them lining up at the box-office window. Let's have the dope on it real soon, Earle, so that we can pass it along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY BILLINGS manages the Garrick Theatre in Virginia, Minn. Billings is one of those showmen who are always trying to make the best of local conditions and do everything possible to plug their houses, as may be evidenced in the various stunts he pulls. We will have more to say about this showman in future issues, and as we expect him to be an active member, we'd like him to start off his activity by sending us in a photo with his next contribution. Right, Harry?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE J. CORCORAN manages the Lincoln Theatre in Parkersburg, West Va. A number of our members know that Corcoran is one of the two showmen sent out by Warner Brothers to handle the circuit's recently acquired houses in this town, Bill Hendricks being the other. Hendricks supervises the Smoot and the Lincoln, operating at the Smoot. We are sure that Corcoran is going to turn out some crackerjack stuff at his house and we also know that the town will see more showmanship.

Warners Seen Eased Out of Control of Company; Franklin Vying with Skouras

Senior Helps Junior

Chicago—"The job of head of Universal is too big a one for Carl, Jr., alone, so I supply much of the brains and active directions myself," Carl Laemmle, Sr., told newspaper interviewers while here.

Laemmle said he had no intentions of retiring and, admitting that the past months have been the most serious in the business history of the industry, predicted rapid improvement from now on.

Will "Tragedy" Prove a Tragedy For Paramount?

One little proviso in the deal between Theodore Dreiser and Paramount for the former's literary opus on every-day American life may develop into a situation more tragic than the tragedy depicted in "An American Tragedy."

It stipulates that Dreiser's supervisory post on the production shall also include the authority to shape his story situations along lines which he sees fit. And, if the author follows in the footsteps of others in his profession, he will insist upon strict observance of at least the important incidents, some of which are plenty hot and sexy. So much so, according to leaders in production circles, censors will need more than one pair of shears when they start trimming.

If the story is to be filmed without radical deviation from the Dreiser plot, it is

Silents on Verge Of Passing Out

Death-knell of silents is expected to be sounded this season as the result of the continued shrinking of silent accounts. At the present time, it is estimated by a leading distributor, silents constitute only about seven per cent of possibilities in figuring gross.

With wiring being speeded up in all sections, the silent business is shrinking so rapidly that distributors figure the time not far distant when they will be unable to get back print costs on silent versions.

Bankers to Decide Question of Management of Company; Brothers Out?

Status of the Warner brothers in company affairs now is being worked out by the bankers headed by Richard O. Hoyt. The brothers, as exclusively told to Motion Picture News some weeks ago, no longer are in control of the company, which is declared to have passed into the hands of the bankers when the new stock issue of $15,100,000 was floated. This new financing resulted in issue of 755,000 shares of new common at $20 a share.

There is under consideration, it is stated, a deal for a three-year contract for the three Warners. This has not yet been set, it is stated, with a number of differences still to be ironed out. The question of personalities and personal vanities is said to be a stumbling block in the matter.

One report has it that Spyros Skouras, head of the theatre department, is slated for a higher position in the organization, although this has been unconfirmed in view of reported efforts of the bankers to secure Harold B. Franklin, erstwhile Fox West Coast president, to head the destinies of the Warner chain.

Has Slump Passed? Para. Says Yes and Then No

The height of something or other was reached this week when Paramount fired its entire short subject department at the Eastern studio, and in the next breath announced completion of plans for the Paramount-Publix "Prosperity Week" campaign during which it will attempt, by radio and other channels, to convince the "great American public" that the "slump has passed and the country is on the brink of an unequalled period of prosperity."

The Prodigal Son Returns

With the move back to flesh-and-blood gaining momentum rapidly, leaders predict that within four months stage shows will occupy the same niche in exhibition circles that was their's before sound, so suddenly, dislodged them two years ago.

Sound shorts built along vaudeville lines flopped miserably in "subbing" for presentation acts, they claim, although it is admitted that a bigger market now exists for good one and two reelers than ever before in the industry's history.

Barnacle Bills Are Preparing For a Tanning

Navigators of stately theatre craft are rigging the sails for another storm. Word seeps through from more than one banking circle that holders of money bags have failed—or sternly refused—to savvy the why and wherefore of radical increases in theatre operating expenses brought about by the new and rapidly developing trend toward flesh-and-blood.

Operating nut for chains dropped heavily two years ago, because novelty of sound had sufficient weight to carry the show without presentation units. The latter at that time were eating up profits tremendously. Relief arrived when they were thrown into the dis-

Vol. XLII NEW YORK CITY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1930 No. 13

SPILLING THE LIFE BLOOD

FOR centuries the story of the dumbbell who killed the goose that laid the golden eggs has been held up as a horrible example of rotten judgment. But the simp wouldn't stand out like a sore thumb these days; he'd have lots of company.

However, as he is the hero of this tale, let's put him in modern dress. We'll cast him as a big mogul in a big motion picture concern with the final say-so in all matters. Now for the plot. Tough times hit the land. The treasurer reports to him that the profits are skidding and that he will be able to buy only two, instead of seven, yachts the next year.

"Hell, we'll fix that up easily," he ejaculates. "Start with the advertising and publicity departments. What good are they, anyway? The company is established, our stars are set with the public and they don't bring in any contracts. We've been wasting too much money on those departments as it is. Slice to the bone."

Sweet Memories

THE slicing is done. Newspapers, magazines and theatres fail to get any aid from the home office and lose interest in the company's pictures. The public soon forgets its stars. Then the big mogul starts to raise the devil with others of his underlings.

Might as well face the facts, trite as they may be. The truth of the matter is that the power of publicity made the picture industry; publicity, advertising and exploitation men are more responsible for the success of many a picture than the producer or sales manager. These men who build up companies and stars constitute the very life blood of the industry.

But the blood spilling goes on periodically, and the resultant anemia is reflected in the box offices.

Hypodermics

A GREAT picture hits the screen. The critics sugarcoat it with praise and the public fights to see it.

Behind the scenes the producer takes another shot of hypo and envisions himself as one of the immortals. The general sales manager takes another puff from the opium pipe and admits to himself that he's the berries when it comes to selling pictures. The members of the cast and the technical staff involuntarily bow whenever they hear a noise, taking for granted that it is applause.

All are helpful, and sometimes necessary, but when it comes down to analyzing this particular production the question simmers down to the story. It had a story with guts, to put it bluntly. The story put it over—and don't kid yourself otherwise. The credit should go to the author, and, to practically the same extent, to the man who bought the vehicle.

But They Lecture

JUDGING from the number of flops which emanate from Hollywood weekly there are few heads of story departments who are able to recognize a good story when they see it, notwithstanding their penchant for delivering talks before women's clubs on "Scouring the World for Good Material" or kindred subjects.

Producers in the past have opened their purses liberally in an attempt to corner literary product. Famous writers have gone to the Coast to give of their talents to the new art. Then their stories were turned over for judgment and decision to some callow youth or hare-brained girl. That, of course, was too much for authors of prominence. The mystery that Hollywood throws about the "art" of writing stories for the screen nauseated them. To be compelled to deal with "story editors" who came from God knows where, and who themselves could not write an epigram, naturally soured them against "the movies."

Fading Out Action

ACTORS are engaged because of their histrionic ability; authors for their writing ability—but story editors seem to be hired because of—

There is no answer to that one. Perhaps some of those holding the title are relatives. Others possibly sneaked in through pull. But how many of them have any literary reputation?

The story makes the picture and the star. There are enough examples to justify that aphorism. The quick deathblow dealt to filmusicals by the public demonstrated with a punch that the people want a story, not a conglomeration of gags, songs and scenery. They want action, instead of the output of insane Tin Pan Alley.

Why are story editors?

Warner, R-K-O Bids for Franklin Is Report; Arthur to Direct Fox Chains?

Franklin to Vacation Abroad Before Any New Connection

Harold B. Franklin

One of these offers, it is understood, was tendered him by John Dillon, representative of Richard O. Hoyt in Warner affairs. The others are said to be from Radio-Keith-Orpheum and Howard Hughes, president of Caddo Prod. The latter wants Franklin to handle all his film interests, it is said.

Before accepting any new position, however, the veteran circuit operator intends to vacation in Europe.

Question of Salary

The question of salary and independence of operation were factors which led to the split between Clarke and Franklin. The Fox West Coast chieftain was drawing $1,250 weekly and a ten per cent cut on the profits. The net of the chain for the first half of the current year was $3,500,000. Clarke, it is said, felt that Franklin's salary was too high.

Franklin's contract, made with West Coast a few months before Fox bought control of the company, called for complete authority without interference. However, the board of directors had a veto power, it is said.

Under terms of this contract, Franklin refused dictation from the home office or studio, running the chain as he saw fit. Its development to 513 theatres and expansion as far eastward as Illinois were accomplished under Franklin's regime.

Once Slated for President

The rift between Franklin and Clarke occasioned surprise because Franklin was one of the signers of the round robin urging William Fox to carry out his trusteeship agreement, and was reported being groomed by Halsey Stuart and John E. Otterson for the presidency of the Fox companies, at the time of the fight for control early this year.

Had Been Patched Up

Franklin came east last week for conferences with Clarke, and both are understood to have compromised in their positions. However, a later jam developed and Franklin resigned on Monday. Oldknow was immediately sent to the Coast to take charge.

Another slant in the row is said to have been the proposed deal to take over operation of the Coast Paramount houses, which have been giving Fox West Coast a battle in a number of spots. Franklin engineered the original deal under which West Coast took over the Loew and Paramount theatres, but the government "asked" that the houses be turned back. The inside report on that step was the allegation that Paramount, dissatisfied with the hook-up, had suggested such a request by the government.

R-K-O Newsreel

With Courtland Smith this week engaged in cutting a number of pictures for RKO, the report persisted that the newsreel which he plans to issue will be released through RKO. Jack Connelly, for some years associated with Smith, is to be editor. Smith is president of Trans Lux Corp., which would produce the newsreel.

$600,000—and No Work

Insurance on the $600,000 declared due Harold B. Franklin on the unexpired portion of his contract with Fox West Coast Theatres has been written by Albert G. Ruben, veteran insurance broker. The policy underwrites payment to Franklin of the $600,000 in installments over a period of 18 months. Franklin's contract called for a salary of $1,250 weekly and a ten per cent cut of the profits.

Axe Feared at West Coast as Franklin Quits

Hollywood—Reports are flying thick and fast around the Fox West Coast offices, where the entire organization is discussing Harold B. Franklin's resignation. Oscar A. Oldknow, executive vice-president of Fox Theatres, and now executive vice-president of the Fox West Coast chain, arrived Wednesday to take charge of the situation. Franklin is expected here next week.

Most prevalent among reports is that Arch Bowles, head of the San Francisco division, will take over the Los Angeles and southern California divisions, making just two divisions on the Coast. This would eliminate J. J. Franklin and Harry Hartman, division managers, who probably would be placed elsewhere.

Bud Lollier, it is said, is to take charge of the real estate department, while Frank Whitbeck, it is understood, is scheduled to go East.

Arthur, Under Oldknow Supervision, to Run All Fox Houses?

Harry C. Arthur ultimately will have charge of both the East and West circuits of Fox Theatres, which will be co-ordinated by Oscar A. Oldknow, executive vice-president of Fox Theatres and Fox West Coast Theatres, it is reliably reported. Arthur will work under Oldknow's supervision, it is understood.

Oscar Oldknow

This, it is reported, will be the aftermath of the resignation of Harold B. Franklin as president and general manager of Fox West Coast Theatres. Oldknow arrived on the Coast Wednesday to take charge of Fox West Coast.

Arthur has been associated with Franklin since West Coast took over the Pacific Northwest chain in the Far Northwest. Last spring he was transferred to the East to take charge of operating Fox houses from the Atlantic Coast to the Mississippi.

Oldknow has occupied the post of executive vice-president of Fox Theatres since last April. He came to the company from National Theatre Supply Co.

Three Sign New Pacts

Hollywood—Among those to sign new term contracts this week were Carol Lombard, Joan Marsh and Genevieve Tobin. Miss Lombard will work under the Paramount banner while Miss Tobin will play featured roles for Universal. Miss Marsh will appear in M-G-M productions.

Sticking Will Rogers

Hollywood—A habit of a lifetime may be a habit of a lifetime, but sooner or later it is bound to be broken, as Will Rogers can—and probably will—tell you. The "Lightnin'" company near Reno, Nevada, found itself without a place to see rushes that had to be seen. A search over the city resulted in finding one theatre where the day's work could be viewed between the local matinee and evening shows. The canny theatre manager agreed to the use of his theatre for this purpose on condition that Will Rogers make an appearance at the evening performance. Rogers was consulted and convinced that his lifelong habit of never making personal appearances had to be broken. The rushes were seen and so was Will Rogers—much to the delight of a Reno audience.

The Insiders' Outlook

BANKING interests are said to have an entirely different reason for wanting to dictate the destinies of the picture business, aside from just the financial slant, and that is a desire to prevent control by any political or racial group. In this, it is said, they are prompted by warning that government regulation might follow such control.

There have been charges from time to time that factions of both major political parties were looking toward the power of the screen with hungry eyes, feeling it offered a tremendous medium to put over political ideas and candidates.

The last presidential election demonstrated to what extent religion could enter into national politics and it is the possibility that the screen might cast its lot with one side or the other, in the event of another and even more bitter fight, that is causing uneasiness.

There is no desire or design to single out any nationality or religion in this reported move on the part of the bankers, but rather they feel that distribution of screen power among many groups would be a happier arrangement all around.

Behind the Scenes

The Canadian government announces with the fervor of a barker that it is going to launch an inquiry into the film industry of the Dominion. Meaning, boiled down, that it is peeved because Paramount bought out the Famous Players chain there. The entry of a "foreign" company was an intolerable situation. With a grand gesture it embarks on its probe—and the natives applaud this patriotic maneuver. It's big-time stuff.

But is it? Here's the lowdown on the situation:

The power in Canadian politics somersaulted in June from the Liberal to the Conservative party In the new regime, an outstanding figure and wielding all influence needed, is a gentleman who ran a Canadian theatre only a few years ago. He was financing it, not managing it. The house was among the independents; his connection with it not generally known. Famous forced the group out and took over the theatre. If this individual wants to put Famous in the grease, all he has to do is say the word. He has been writing personal letters to publications where razzes of the chain appeared, asking that copies of everything they ran be sent also to him personally.

A Dumbbell in the Woodpile

Week after week this Insider has visited one of the big first-run theatres on Broadway to review pictures. In its day it was the king pin of the Main Stem; it was generally packed to the doors because it had little competition. The management became smug and complacent. The public had the habit, so why worry about the future?

De luxe houses began to spring up all around and trade dropped off. The theatre staged a comeback when a little showmanship was applied, but then it was swallowed up in a producer's chain. Now conditions are worse than before. At any hour of any day you'll see a small group of patrons grouped way up in front, almost falling into the orchestra pit. And there's no flesh on the stage; no reason for a "baldhead row."

The reason is that the picture always is so dim that it can hardly be seen from the rear of the house. Whether it's a case of poor projection or poor prints cannot be determined.

The manager probably puts his ushers through a military drill each morning and considers his job done for the day.

Opportunity

The year is going to be a big one for the independents, judging by all the signs, with many of them to get right back into the thick of things before the season ends. Good pictures tell the story and some of the companies which have been skidding are delivering in a big way.

One of the drawbacks has been what may or may not have been a plot to give independent producers the go-by. With the big fellows grabbing theatres right and left, the word is said to have been passed to the bankers that financing independents was bad business, because the independents had no theatre outlets. The collapse of independent production was a natural result.

However, getting theatres and then getting pictures which would make the theatres profitable were different stories. Some whose activity was concentrated on expansion rather than production found the going tough, and had to fall back on the independents for product. The shortage is by no means at an end, so independents are preparing to step into the breach.

A Samaritan

Sentiment in the film business? There's plenty of it. For instance, there's the case of a girl employee, who was suffering from an ailment which required an expensive operation. She didn't have the money necessary to pay the specialist required and was in a quandary.

The sales manager of the company heard of her plight and led a move on the part of the boys to kick in with the necessary shekels. The dough came in fast, but the president of the company got wind of the affair and hastened to his sales chief. As soon as he learned of the amount needed, he wrote out a check and ordered the contributions stopped.

Accordingly, when one of the company branch manager's health failed and he was on the rocks, the sales manager sent him the dough, so the president's generosity brought relief to two needy members of his organization.

THE INSIDERS

Dope It Out

What prominent "juvenile" is affecting a wig to conceal his advancing years?

What exhibitor unit official has been ousted and was it for a too-close association with distributors?

What disc equipment is being junked in greatest number by distributors, despite its start under favorable auspices?

Who is the so-called big shot who has been unable to have a big insurance policy written, chiefly because brokers he has tried to interest refuse to tolerate him personally, and can't stand the kind of parties he insists on having?

What "high-powered" executive recently netted a tidy bankroll through a framed real estate deal in Canada?

Who is the production official who recently threatened to bolt his company for another favorable offer, and was dissuaded from doing so by a hasty trip to the Coast by another company official?

Federal Probe of Industry Whitewashed, Rembusch Charges; Hits Indiana Zoning

Must Start at Capital

No anti-trust cases can be brought except through headquarters of the Department of Justice at Washington, Frank J. Rembusch, veteran Indiana exhibitor leader, says he was informed by a Federal Grand Jury at Indianapolis. Rembusch says he attempted to go before the Grand Jury to offer an affidavit that the Hays association constituted a criminal conspiracy. He is to make depositions in support of his charges early in October.

Tiffany Suing Tiffany; Covets Sparkling Name

Is "Tiffany" merely a noun or an inviolable trade name?

The question is to be settled in court, for Tiffany & Co., Fifth Ave. jewelers, have brought suit against Tiffany Productions, Inc., in the New York Supreme Court in an effort to restrain the film company from using "Tiffany" in its name.

Noah Webster is to play an important role in the case, according to H. William Fitelson, attorney for the producing company, for in his literary masterpiece the name appears as a noun.

"The objections to the corporate title of Tiffany Productions, Inc., after a continuous and uninterrupted use of the name for approximately 10 years is both sudden and dillatory," said Fitelson. "The title 'Tiffany,' when applied to motion pictures, is as much an institution as the same name applied to jewelry.

"There are more than 50 organizations, such as restaurants, trucking concerns, radio distributors, toy manufacturers and others too numerous to mention now using the name 'Tiffany' in their corporate titles. There is no more likelihood of mistaken identity in the title 'Tiffany' when concomitant to the product than with Webster's Dictionary definition of the word 'tiffany.'"

"Bat Whispers" Wide Film Version Report Affirmed

United Artists has confirmed the exclusive Motion Picture News story that "The Bat Whispers" has been made on both standard size and 65 mm. film. The wide film version was made at night, the cast having been sworn to secrecy in the matter. This is the first United Artists' picture to be made on wide film.

West Coast Sells 3 More

San Francisco—Three Fox West Coast houses that have reversed the process, as to theatre expansion, are Red Mill, Crystal and the Jewel Theatres, which have been sold to Arnold Schaack and M. Goldberg.

Accusations to Be Filed with Congress by Stormy Petrel; Attacks Hays

Charges that the Federal investigation of the industry in the credit and arbitration cases was whitewashed are to be filed with Congress by Frank J. Rembusch, Indianapolis exhibitor and storm center of a number of controversies between exhibitors and distributors.

The government's action in both cases was lax and a number of important lines of evidence were ignored, Rembusch will charge, he asserted in an exclusive interview, Wednesday, with Motion Picture News.

Rembusch has attempted to go before the Federal Grand Jury at Indianapolis to testify that the Hays organization is a conspiracy in restraint of trade. He was balked in this, he says, despite his offer to prove that the organization is engaged in a move to raise prices in the industry, as well as operating an espionage system which, he says, is forcing independents out of business.

Rembusch also is carrying on a fight against efforts to zone Indiana, contending that concerted action in the matter violates the anti-trust statutes. He insists that distributors have no right to limit him in contracts and that the Thacher decision has settled the question of concerted action on the matter of contracts.

Rembusch recently asked the Department of Justice to indict participants in the 5-5-5 conferences at Atlantic City, contending the meetings violated the spirit of the Thacher decision.

28 Days' Protection in St. Louis Zoning Plan

St. Louis—Giving first runs 28 days' protection over all local theatres and those within a radius (automobile mileage) of 25 miles and Class B theatres a clearance of 14 days, a zoning schedule for St. Louis now is being considered for ratification by exhibitors and distributors. A continuing committee is to consider any proposed future changes. On the zoning committee are Fred Wehrenberg, head of the M. P. T. O. of eastern Missouri and southern Illinois; Miss L. B. Schofield, secretary of the Film Board; Charles Skouras, Oscar Lehr, Clarence Kaimann, Thomas James, M. Schweitzer, L. J. McCarthy, Louis Ansell, S. E. Pirtle, C. T. Lynch, D. P. Rathbone and C. D. Hill.

Bosses at Last!

Hollywood—For actresses to play in pictures directed by their ex-husbands seems to be the rage at the present time. Doris Deane is appearing in an Educational comedy that Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, her former husband, is megaphoning, while Betty Compson is playing the feminine lead in "Discontent," which James Cruze, her former mate, is directing.

Well Heeled

Washington—Allied States Association is "well heeled" for its expansion program, begun last week with invasion of the St. Louis territory where a new Allied unit was launched. The settlement made with Tiffany, under terms of which Allied received a cash payment in lieu of a cut on a picture the company was to make for Allied, finds the organization sitting pretty from the financial slant. Production of the picture was to have been in return for Allied's backing of the five-year franchise plan put over by Oscar Hanson, Tiffany sales manager.

Allied Invasion Of St. Louis Stirs Up Talk Aplenty

St. Louis—They still are talking about that Allied "putsch" last week when W. A. Steffes, H. M. Richey and Col. H. A. Cole came in without any fanfare or flag-waving and established an Allied unit for eastern Missouri and southern Illinois.

The Allied chieftains invaded St. Louis following receipt of wires from a number of independents asking that they come to town and outline Allied's aims and accomplishments. Arrived here, they refused to enter the M.P.T.O. meeting, taking the position that it was not their affair, but stating they would answer questions from exhibitors interested in the Allied project. This was done during the convention, it was pointed out, because the independents interested could not afford two trips to the city.

There were plenty of innuendoes passed during the two days' meetings, some of them asserting that the Allied affair was a party. Some of the women who took an active part in formation of the Allied local are declared to feel pretty strongly about the insinuations passed.

Claim 20 Signatories

About 80 exhibitors and distributors were registered during the two confabs, among whem were about 30 exhibitors. More than 20 of this number are declared to have signed up with the new Allied unit, despite the statement of Fred Wehrenberg, president of the M.P.T.O., that the meeting was a bust.

J. L. Price, of East St. Louis, is president of the new association, which is known as Allied Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois. Mrs. Joseph Mogler, widow of the late Joseph Mogler, prominent in M.P.T.O. affairs, is treasurer of the new unit. Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, whose husband is a vice-president of the local M.P.T.O., is secretary, and J. D. Fresne, Mexico, Mo., is vice-president.

Mr. Chimp Puts Crimp Into Six Syllable's Style

Demonstrating once more his innate propensities for the extraordinary, and further enhancing his international reputation as impresario, master of ceremonies and entrepeneur, Michael (Sonorous Syllable) Simmons startled the members of the AMPA at their weekly luncheon Thursday by another example of his unprecedented modesty in sharing the forum with intellects that eclipse his own cerebral convolutions.

Last week it was Heywood Broun, columnist, nominee for Congress and spokesman of the Algonquin intelligentsia; this week it was none other than I. M. Chimp, Tiffany star, who drew an extraordinary aggregation of the amanuenses of the species and held them spellbound as, after bringing greetings from the Wampas, he asserted that pictures, especially shorts, are becoming better all the time.

Mike's introduction of the guest of honor fell on deaf ears, for the AMPAnics were eating soup at the time, so it was but a natural faux pas that one busy gargler should cry: "Aw, pipe down, Mike; don't be so long-winded," during the guest's discourse. Later the board of directors voted to discipline the offending member by forcing him to pay up his dues for the past seven years.

Chicago—Frank Fay, a boy who made good in Hollywood, said that after March of next year he will be producer as well as actor for, admitting the rashness of the decision, he said that was his program for the future. Fay stopped off here en route to Hollywood where he will begin work on "Playboy" immediately on his arrival on the Coast.

"All I know about the picture is its title," Frank said. "From that, it's my guess that I'm going to be an American at last. It's about time, too."

Marco Starting Oct. 3 as Chief Of Roxy Theatre

Regime of Marco of Fanchon & Marco at the Roxy, New York, starts Oct. 3. He is to work under direct supervision of Oscar Oldknow, executive vice-president of Fox Theatres. He will have three assistants in the undertaking.

Walt Roesner, who is slated to be master of ceremonies at the Roxy, will be on hand for the opening performance under the Marco regime and the following week will return to the Fox at San Francisco. His opening show at the Roxy will be "Echoes of France," recently presented at the Coast house.

Roxy is going to Europe for an extended vacation and is scheduled to return to the Roxy theatre, it is said. However, the inside reports are to the effect that he will join RCA upon his return from abroad. He is to manage the picture house which is to be a feature of the Radio City to be built by RCA. In this connection, it will be recalled that prior to assuming charge of the Roxy he made a trip abroad to enlist talent for the theatre. His scheduled trip at the end of this month is said to be for a similar purpose in connection with the new venture.

Baltimore—Hamilton Amusement Co. has been formed here with Robert Kanter, proprietor of the Astor, as president. This company has rebuilt the Parkside, 600 seat residential house in the northeast section, at a cost of about $30,000. It will open Sept. 29. Julius Goodman, proprietor of the Ideal and associated with Kanter in the Astor, is booking manager of the new playhouse.

Lina Basquette Writes Novel of Hollywood Life

Chicago—Lina Basquette arrived in town this week with a manuscript—a novel of Hollywood life—which she deposited with a local publisher.

"I've had the hardest year of my life and am just beginning to feel better," she confided to reporters. "It will take me about three days to get arrangements made for publishing my novel. Then I'm going on to New York and get Lina from the Warners."

Miss Basquette referred to her three-year old daughter who has been in the custody of the Harry Warners since the death of Sam Warner, her first husband.

"I don't want to get back to Hollywood very soon after what I've been through," she continued. "I think I'll have a try with Mr. Ziegfeld when I get to New York, but I have to be back in Hollywood this fall to start work on a picture. I will take Lina back to California with me when I go."

Miss Basquette was divorced recently from Peverell Marley, a cameraman, whom she married a year and a half ago in Los Angeles. Writing and acting are to occupy her future life—and that doesn't mean married life, either, she declared, as she has no intention of remarrying.

Chevalier' Next Set

Hollywood—"Cavalier of the Streets," by Michael Arlen, will be the next Chevalier talker. The French star, who is now in France on a vacation, will make this picture upon his return to Hollywood late this fall. Jeanie MacPherson, who recently signed with Paramount, will perhaps do the adaptation.

Horwitz Loses Zoning Injunction Plea; No Evidence of Price Boost Conspiracy

Reject Zoning Plan

Des Moines—Proposed zoning schedules drafted by Publix and Des Moines exchangemen have been rejected by the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa, states Lester P. Martin, secretary and treasurer. The organization, which was formed recently, some weeks ago went on record as opposed to all protection. The rejection of the proposed clearance plan was made by Clifford L. Niles, F. P. Hagemann and E. O. Ellsworth.

Houston Exhibitor Continues Fight and Enlists Aid of Merchants

Houston, Tex.—No evidence of a conspiracy to force his theatres to increase admissions under penalty of denying them product was presented in Federal Court here, which denied the motion of Will Horwitz, local exhibitor, for an injunction restraining exhibitors from executing proposed zoning plan for this territory.

The temporary injunction was denied after two days of hearings in Federal Court, to which the case was transferred from District Court on motion of the defendants.

This is the second Federal Court action brought to test the legality of protection agreements, the first case having been disposed of in California when a consent decree was entered by the government and Fox West Coast Theatres in the Department of Justice's conspiracy action against the exhibiting firm and a number of distributors. The consent decree resulted in dismissal of a civil suit which previously had replaced a criminal action brought by the government.

Horwitz contends that execution of the zoning agreement will force his theatres to raise prices or be denied product. He has enlisted the aid of local independent merchants in the fight.

Dissatisfied

Kansas City—Dissatisfaction with the recently announced protection and zoning plan is being expressed by some exhibitors in the Kansas City territory. Belief that the code is not fair to several of the smaller towns is the keynote in the expressions of discontent. Meetings are scheduled for revision of certain portions of the plan.

Rules governing Kansas City, Kas., North Kansas City, Mo., and Independence, Mo., have not been adopted as yet.

Robber Kidnaps Theatre Men, but Pays Taxi Fare

Chicago—A lone bandit without a weapon entered the United Artists Theatre in the Loop early this week, herded ten employees into the manager's office, where he picked up a gun, about $700 in cash, kidnapped two of his victims and left.

The bandit first encountered Hugh Flannery, an usher, near the entranceway. After conversing with him for a moment, the intruder suddenly thrust his hand into a coat pocket and commanded Flannery to "Stick 'em up." Marching his victim into the theatre, he encountered Miss Dorothy Huss, cashier, and thereafter Roy McGee, engineer; Roy Lewis, an usher; George Hotch, assistant chief of service; F. C. Oswald and Tony Morello, stage hands, and Andrew Sorenson, operator. All these joined in the procession and were marched to the office of Max Blick, assistant manager.

"Thanks for the gun," the bandit smiled, picking one up from a desk. "I feel better now."

He took strong boxes containing the cash from the office, and forcing Blick and McGee to accompany him, left the theatre and hailed a cab. They were driven to the northwest side of the city where the bandit alighted, paid the cab bill and departed.

Adopts Sat.-Wed. Change

Tampa, Fla.—The Tampa advanced its opening day to Saturday and it went over so well that it has decided to use Saturday as the opening day, instead of Sunday, which has been in vogue since the house was opened. Two changes will be made each week, with the other change advanced to Wednesday instead of Thursday.

Committee of 6 For Wis. Zoning

Milwaukee—Any future arguments over zoning here will be handled by the continuing committee of six, which consists of two independent exhibitors, two affiliated and two distributors.

The affiliated members are Harold J. Fitzgerald general manager of Fox Midwesco; and Fred S. Meyers, managing director of Universal's Alhambra. Bernhard Depkin, Warners, is alternate. A. C. Gutenberg, Milwaukee, and F. J. McWilliams, Madison, represent the independents, and L. K. Brin, Milwaukee, and George Huebner, Oconomowoc, are alternates. Jack O'Toole, Tiffany, and Charles W. Trampe, Mid-West, are distributors' representatives, with Thomas Greenwood, Pathe, as alternate.

Bauer Succeeds Staab

Milwaukee—Steve Bauer, former president and the association's representative on the board of directors of Allied States Association, is new executive secretary of the Wisconsin exhibitor unit replacing Henry A. Staab. The latter, who was a member of the state senate, has been secretary of the state organization for several years.

Dues Reduction Weapon in Fight On Allied States

Kansas City—Reduction of dues by the western Missouri and Kansas exhibitor unit is expected to help withstand proposed invasion of the territory by Allied States Association. Kansas City is to be the next objective in the Allied campaign, which has for its object the establishment of an Allied unit in all exchange centers of the country.

R. R. Biechele, veteran president of the local zone unit, attended the convention of the eastern Missouri and southern Illinois unit last week at St. Louis, where a new Allied association was formed. It was expected that following the St. Louis meeting, W. A. Steffes, Col. H. A. Cole and H. M. Richey, Allied leaders, would come to Kansas City to organize a new unit.

Sen. Brookhart is scheduled to be a principal speaker at the sessions.

Spoor Planning Production Plant In Philadelphia

Philadelphia—Business and political circles have been excited by the statement this week that George K. Spoor, promoter of the new Spoor wide-film process, would locate his laboratories, producing plants and film studios in this city in the near future.

In a conference held with Mayor Harry A. Mackay and several members of the Chamber of Commerce, in the former's office in City Hall, Blair Coan, Spoor's representative, stated that "if satisfactory arrangements" can be made, the industry will be established here.

Coan said that it is Spoor's intention to enter production on an extensive scale through his ownership rights in the new wide-film-natural vision-sound and color camera and that this would mean the filming of pictures in and about Philadelphia. He explained the intricacies of the device, and claimed that sound films could be produced at less than one-quarter the present cost by using the Spoor patents.

Impressed by Coan's statements, the conference was followed by the appointment of a committee, representing the city and the Chamber of Commerce, which will view the initial showing of the first picture under the new method at the State-Lake Theatre in Chicago Sept. 27.

Magnachrome Name of 'U' New Wide Film Process

Hollywood—Universal's new wide film process, which has been named Magnachrome, was used for the first time in a short subject, "Oui, Oui, Marie."

While Universal executives are secretive about the device, it has been learned that the picture is first shot on wide film, printed on standard film, and then magnified in projection.

Edgar Moss' Phillies were second with a 50 per cent business increase and Harry Buxbaum's New York Giants came in third. Company sales for the week set a record.

J. R. Grainger

Denver's victory was the fifth in 15 months, the branch having won every "Jimmy" Grainger sales week title, as well as first honors in all special weeks observed last season.

Paramount Gets First Run Outlet In Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh—Paramount will obtain a first-run outlet here at the Gaiety, former burlesque house, which will open early in October. It will be operated by M. A. Shea of Feiber & Shea, which has a number of New York and Pennsylvania theatres. The house will be renamed the Fulton.

Meanwhile, Paramount, following the break with Warners, is set at Philadelphia, where Al Boyd will open Keith's Chestnut.

Amos 'n' Andy Film a Box Office Smash

Hollywood—Amos 'n' Andy panicked them in their first RKO picture, "Check and Double Check," at its preview here. No exhibitor will be "regusted" for booking this talker. A story that gives the radio team plenty of opportunity for doing their stuff, plus good direction, make this talker real entertainment.

When Amos 'n' Andy are on the screen the laughs overlap. One sequence especially, a tire-changing episode, is a riot of fun. The supporting cast is very capable, but the blackface boys take top honors.

The picture has nothing special in the way of production values, but the Amos 'n' Andy names represent box office value plus.

The expression on the face of William LeBaron as he left the theatre seemed to read, "Ain't Dat Sumpin?"

Inside reports are that the radio team has been signed for one more talker with an option on a third. From the looks of the picture, this is undoubtedly true.

CROUCH.

Unaffiliated 30%

Chain development has reduced buying power of independents to about 30 per cent of the national gross, several distributors estimate. The slowing up of theatre acquisitions in recent months has made this figure more or less stable, but up to the time expansion was curtailed, the figure was shrinking at a rapid rate.

Sheehan Assigns Whitbeck, Brown On Big Campaigns

Hollywood—That Fox is impressed with the box-office calibre of "The Big Trail" and "Just Imagine" is evidenced by the fact that Winfield Sheehan is taking an active part in the publicity and advertising campaigns. Both pictures will open here soon.

He has assigned George Brown to handle the former and Frank Whitbeck to promote "Just Imagine," with Joseph Shea and Roger Ferri of the studio staff to okay all copy on both houses. This action caused considerable surprise in film circles, as Whitbeck is recognized as being one of the ace copy writers on any circuit and is credited with putting over many theatres through his punch exploitation methods. The Fox Criterion here is now rated as "The House of Hits" due to Whitbeck's campaigns on pictures shown there.

Return to Filmusicals Seen in Warner Action

Hollywood—Despite the lack of enthusiasm with which the public has greeted musical pictures, Warners apparently are not joining in the general opinion that they are out permanently. They are understood to be notifying song writers to remain on the Coast and "sit tight," in the hope that there will be a revival of filmusicals' popularity.

Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby, who have written many Broadway musical comedies and filmusicals, have just been signed up by First National for two years.

Cinema Patents Case Not Dismissed, Counsel Says

Case of Cinema Patents against Craft Laboratories has not been settled as yet, despite report to the contrary, says H. A. Huebner, patent counsel for Cinema. The case is to be tried some time this fall. The court has denied a temporary injunction pending trial of the action and denied Craft's motion to dismiss the case.

W. E. Suits Up in Jan.

Western Electric's patent suit against Pacent Reproducer Corp. is to come up in U. S. District Court, New York, in January. Its suit against General Talking Pictures will be heard about the same time, while its appeal from General's decision at Wilmington probably will be heard in March.

RKO Breathes Easier as Amos 'n' Andy Film Clicks; Shakeup Scare Passing

We're Sorry

Due to errors in telegraphic transmission, MOTION PICTURE NEWS was all wet on its advance dope on the "Kismet" preview at Santa Barbara. The film was shown in rough form at the preview. However, a later showing of the picture after editing discloses that in the form in which it is to be released the film is fine entertainment, with Otis Skinner turning in a great performance. The Los Angeles reviewers went into raves over the film, predicting it will be a hit. Statement that some of the scenes were in Technicolor was in error, the News reviewer intending, instead, to say that some of the scenes would have been more effective if done in Technicolor.

"Check and Double Check" One of Biggest Gambles in Industry

There is real rejoicing at RKO due to the reception accorded Amos 'n' Andy's "Check and Double Check." The picture represents one of the greatest gambles in film history and upon its success hinges much of the company's future.

J. A. Schnitzer

Joseph A. Schnitzer is on his way to the Coast, where the picture's outcome probably has averted a shake-up. Last week report was current and denied that the company was buying up the unexpired portion of William Le Baron's contract, but the Amos 'n' Andy film probably has changed all that. For some time there have been rumors of an impending change in company affairs, with a different system of production to be determined upon, and Schnitzer to become increasingly active in affairs of both Radio-Keith - Orpheum and RKO.

William Le Baron

When the word was flashed from Hollywood this week that the picture had hit, it ended a period of uncertainty and suspense which permeated the entire organization. Even the starring team, Amos 'n' Andy, were fearful of the outcome, recalling the dull thud with which radio, stage and concert celebs have flopped in their screen debut. Their future on the radio also was at stake.

Radio had invested $500,000 in the stars' services and the production nut reached a high figure, which was occasion for worry if the picture failed to click. The Pepsodent company also was anxious because it has invested a fortune to build up Amos 'n' Andy as the premier attraction on the radio.

Clara's Checks

Hollywood—Clara Bow has press-agented herself into front page headlines again, this time by stopping payment on checks totaling $13,900 which, according to reports, she wrote in a California gambling hall to cover her losses. Will Rogers, the story goes, dined Clara and several of her friends at the place before the play began. The holder of the slips of paper informed B. P. Schulberg, Paramount studio head, about the star's bit of strategy, but B. P. said that it didn't concern him.

Following the breaking of the story, Clara was said to be under the care of a nurse at her home, and the gambling house proprietor felt sick, too. Louise Dressler, it is said, lost $1,500 at the same time, but paid up in cash.

R-K-O Puts Ban On Freak Names

The heroes and heroines of the tabloid papers no longer rate vaudeville bookings on the strength of the headlines they get. This ultimatum has been issued by Radio-Keith-Orpheum, which has prepared a blacklist of those whose only claim to a booking is notoriety. They're out, from now on, and only those with histrionic ability will entertain RKO audiences.

Among those banned by the organization are Miss Leoni Cauchois, the former Mrs. Rudy Vallee; "Peaches" Browning, Primo Carnera, Siamese twins, tree sitters, queens of beauty contests, bridge jumpers, husband slayers and the like. Actors, not freaks, are the order of the day, according to the circuit's booking department, which has issued the following edict:

"There is no place in vaudeville for the sensational 'name' act. It may have its place in some houses, but not in the combination vaudeville-picture theatres.

"No guarantee of entertainment goes with such a name. About the only thing that can be depended upon to go with it is a big, unhealthy and unearned salary. For the 'name' act of this classification rarely ever draws its salary, and, as a rule, it flops on the stage."

Canadian Chain in Prosperity Plug

Toronto—The 200 theatres of the Famous Players chain in Canada are arranging to stage a spectacular business plug in the form of a "Prosperity Week" from Oct. 11 to 18 as a means of arousing country-wide confidence. A message in the form of a talking trailer by R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada, is a feature and there will be heavy newspaper advertising, banners, lobby displays and printed matter, as well as special screen attractions.

Practically every city and town in the whole Dominion will be directly reached through the campaign and, in many instances, the co-operation of local merchants has been solicited.

Heywood Wakefield Chair Is Standard for Publix

Heywood—Wakefield chairs will continue as standard equipment in Publix theatres as the result of a new contract recently signed by officials of the theatre company with J. George Feinberg, representing H-W.

contended, Paramount will find more "tragedy" than it bargained for. And if these questionable passages, some of which are brutally frank, never reach the screen, a large part of the stiff fee paid Dreiser for film rights will net Paramount zero.

card, although part of the savings went to tilted rentals for sound pictures.

Gradually, however, sound's novelty began to wear and the stage gag again came to life to bolster weak picture attractions. Chain chiefs explained the "novelty" angle to bankers when queried on the new boost in operating expenses, and, naturally, steered clear of discussion regarding a poor crop of pictures. Not satisfied with their alibi, the money men dispatched secret investigators out into the field to get the real low-down. Their reports verified earlier suspicions: weak attractions were hastening the end of sound's sensational draw. And now they aim to ascertain who's responsible for weak pictures. And why.

Three Get Contracts

Hollywood—Before shutting down its plant until Jan. 1, First National gave term contracts to David Manners, Dorothy Peterson and Joe Donahue, featured players.

Chain Theatre Admission Tax May Be Publix Protection Demand Aftermath

Showdown Looming Between Exhibitors of N. W. and Circuit

Minneapolis—With independents of this territory determined to fight any and all protection demands, this territory is set for a showdown between Publix and independent operators. Feeling ran so high at the special convention of the Northwest exhibitor unit this week that the independents gave serious consideration to proposal that they back a state admission tax on chain theatres and censorship measure.

However, they declined to go out for censorship and a proposed admission tax on chains of 10 or more theatres, and decided upon court action against any distributors who refuse to sell to independent exhibitors unless they agree to the Publix protection demands.

In addition, the independents determined to back any anti-chain legislation which may be proposed in Minnesota or the Dakotas and hinted they may institute some such legislation.

Thumbs Down on Schedules

W. A. Workman, M-G-M manager, sent a copy of the proposed zoning schedules to W. A. Steffes, together with a letter stating the schedules were not proposed by Publix or the Film Board, but were individual proposals and not for publication. The letter was read, but the schedules were returned unopened with the notation that the exhibitors were opposed to all protection and had determined to see that it is killed. Proposal that an independent distributor address the convention on the subject was squelched, the independents taking the position that Publix was trying to sell them something they already had killed.

The convention, originally scheduled for two days, ended after the first day's session, as all business had been cleared.

Stage Band to Be Used In New Beacon Policy

Straight film policy of the Beacon, Warner uptown Broadway house, is being abandoned in favor of a film and stage show combination in an experiment which gets under way Oct. 10, when Aarenson's Commanders, stage band, will begin an indefinite run at the house. They will make their debut with "Moby Dick."

New N. W. Head

Minneapolis—H. M. Miller, Cloquet exhibitor, has handed in his resignation as president of the Northwest exhibitor unit, asserting that the job is costing him too much money. Bennie Berger, veteran Grand Forks, S. D., showman, has been named to round out Miller's unexpired term. Miller was elected president at last year's session when W. A. Steffes declined to be a candidate, and was named business manager of the association.

Hughes' New Coast Plant for Color Films

Hollywood—Architect's drawing of new structure now in construction to house plant for Howard Hughes' Multicolor venture. Thirty-eight industrial plants throughout the country have been leased by Hughes, to turn out educational and advertising films in Multicolor.

Newsreel House Proves a Flop In Coast Trial

Los Angeles—The Newsreel Theatre, which opened here three weeks ago, has already changed its policy and starting Sept. 22 launched repeat sowings of popular attractions.

The house will assume its former name, the President, and will have the sound version of "The Birth of a Nation" as its first offering on the new plan. Fox West Coast Theatres will continue to direct the theatre in conjunction with Mike Rosenberg, who operates a string of second-run houses in the downtown district.

The reason for the change in policy is largely due, it is thought, to the fact that newsreels were but a part of the regular program offered, comedies and short subjects filling out the program and making the house almost anything but a newsreel house. Another reason for the failure of the newsreel idea to go over is the lack of enough patrons in the near vicinity of the house. Those who would patronize such a house are too often far from the place, Los Angeles being spread out over such a territory that only a small portion of the population pass by the theatre.

Stage Shows Planned For "Cincy" Theatre

Cincinnati—Plans are being completed to materially enlarge the RKO Lyric, downtown house. Seating capacity will be increased from 1,400 to 2,000, and other improvements will be made, at a total estimated cost of $250,000. There will be no change in present policy of pictures, it is claimed, although it has been reported that stage acts will be presented.

"Angels'" Angel Angeling Coast Color Company

Hollywood—Howard Hughes' interest in Multicolor process will be developed with a new two-story building at Romaine, Orange and Sycamore Sts., where a newly created organization will handle laboratory work for licensees. Hughes will seek to interest industrial companies in color production, it is understood.

The process, it is said, obviates the use of special cameras or additional lighting, affording color on a plain black-and-white production basis. Projection may be made over any standard machine, according to the company.

Canadian Government Orders Probe of Film Business; Flag Waving Stirs Act

Musicians' Strike Hits Neighborhoods

St. Louis—While first runs seem to be making the grade without difficulty, the neighborhoods haven't been doing so well since the musicians' strike started Sept. 1. This is strange because some of the houses where receipts dropped have been without manual music for months. Meanwhile, no peace overtures are being made, with both sides continuing to mark time in the struggle. Orchestras of the Skouras houses went out Sept. 19. Some of the houses cut prices when they went on a straight sound-film policy, indicating they feared box-office reaction to abandonment of stage shows.

Toronto Switches To Flesh While Unions Get Gate

Toronto—Instability is the chief feature of current conditions in Canada's film capital. Loew's Downtown, after a vaude-film policy for many years, is apparently on the eve of shifting to all-celluloid with sound. Musicians and stagehands have had notice, an unusual twist in view of the back-to-flesh trend.

At the same time the Uptown, just superceded by the Imperial as F. P.'s ace house, is in an era of lighter grosses. Uptown is owned by Loew's and this fact, it is generally accepted, prompted the F. P. move for the lease giving the owner a percentage plus a stated figure, and Publix, therefore, had a Loew property as No. 1 house of the Canadian chain with the owners sharing in successes.

Now there is a strong chance the house will revert back and that Loew's may step in with a presentation policy there to give Jack Arthur and the Imperial a run for the top-notch trade.

The Imperial at the same time is starting into the personal appearance business very heavily and it's new in these parts, lending color to the story. Mitzi Green opened there on September 19 with Buddy Rogers, Lillian Roth, Gary Cooper, Paul Ash and Jesse Crawford all announced as likely attractions for the near future. The Star Weekly also reports the house about to install miniature golf in the basement for the cash customers.

The Shubert legit house, Royal Alexandra, also re-enters the film field with "Hell's Angels" on a tentative 5-week booking on September 29. "Abraham Lincoln" closed September 20 to make way for a week of stage, "Marigold," Scotch operetta from Kingsway Theatre, London. "Hell's Angels" then is hoping for a run. "All Quiet" was five weeks in the same house in midsummer.

At the same time, the Princess, Erlanger legit, largely dark for years, returns to life with Arch Selwyn's picture star series, starting with Colleen Moore on the stage in "On the Loose" after its premiere in Rochester. This is the Selwyn home town.

Philly Managers Hit Steady Pace And Forget Strike

Philadelphia—The musicians' strike in Philadelphia has apparently settled down to a stage of siege. No overtures of any importance have been made by either side and the managers are coasting along to average—in some places a little better than average—business without the aid of stage shows.

The first week passed with excellent business being hung up by the Mastbaum, Earle and Fox theatres, the three houses concerned. For this current week the Mastbaum has brought on Joe E. Brown as a stage headliner. Brown appears on a small platform built over the orchestra pit and entertains with some stories and "gags." Announcing that he had at last achieved his ambition of being the "whole show," his one-man act went over big without any musical accompaniment. With Gene Morgan as straight man, Brown later puts on a comedy skit, illustrating a movie scene that went on the cutting room floor.

1-Man-in-Booth Is Ultimatum of N. W. Exhibitors

Seattle—Walkout of union projectionists early in October looms as the result of inability of the union and exhibitors to settle differences arising over the number of men to be employed in the booth.

Projectionists have refused exhibitors' request for elimination of the union rule demanding two men in the booth of every theatre regardless of size or type. Exhibitors, through the Northwest exhibitor association, have notified the union that on and after Oct. 4 they will employ only the number of men necessary "for safe and proper projection of talking pictures."

This implies employment of only one man in the booth of neighborhood and suburban houses.

Paramount Buy of Famous Chain Held Partly Responsible for Agitation

Ottawa—Investigation of film business in Canada, particularly the activities of Famous Players Canadian and the allegation of independents that their booking of films is restricted, has been authorized by Federal Minister of Labor G. D. Robertson. Peter White of Toronto has been named commissioner under the general combines act to conduct the inquiry.

Ever since the Paramount acquisition of Famous Players Canadian there has been considerable agitation for a government probe of Canadian film business. The last government hinted that such action might be taken, for the deal aroused considerable Canadian nationalist sentiment.

The move of the new conservative government in ordering the general inquiry has occasioned surprise.

Stagehands Get Swift Kick When They Walk Out

Minneapolis—Stagehands have been sent back to work and operators warned they would lose their union charter if they back the scheduled walkout of stagehands here.

William Dunn, business agent of the stagehands, grabbed his hat and beckoned President Donnelly to walk out on an all-day meeting with Publix, called by Theodore L. Hays, so the story goes. He had warned the meeting, it is said, that unless Publix kicked in with $780 for a double crew within ten minutes that a strike would be called.

Stagehands walked out of the Minnesota and within ten mintues the house was being bannered. Twelve stench bombs were hurled inside the theatre and among the stand-out crowd Saturday night. Police protection was ordered and Dunn and Donnelly have been expelled from the union by the international head and the stagehands ordered back to work under penalty of losing their charter. Operators, as well, were warned of similar proposed action.

Writ Halts Picketing in Fort Wayne Operator Jam

Fort Wayne, Ind.—Temporary restraining order against picketing of the Creighton here has been issued on complaint of Tony H. Nellesen, owner of the theatre, for injunction against Ray Racine and 28 other alleged members of the operators' local. Nellesen seeks award of $10,000 damages against the defendants. The temporary restraining order will remain in effect until a hearing can be held on the issuance of a permanent injunction.

Jurors' Stories Used in Move to Save Pantages

San Francisco—State Attorney General Webb at Sacramento has under consideration affidavits filed in a new move to save Alexander Pantages from prison. One has a sworn statement that a juror in the Pantages case expressed himself at least three weeks before the trial as being determined "to send that Greek where he belongs."

Two women jurors charge that a juror threatened to tell a Los Angeles minister how they voted and acted unless they joined in a verdict of guilty, and a third alleges she was led to believe that a verdict of guilty, "with leniency," would give the court the right to extend clemency, otherwise she would have voted for acquittal. As a matter of fact, it is claimed, the law takes no cognizance of the recommendation and the sentence passed was mandatory.

Pantages received the maximum of one to 50 years in prison for an alleged criminal attack on a 17-year-old girl. The same evidence was presented the Los Angeles district attorney, it is claimed, but nothing was done in the matter.

Columbia Joins Hays

Climaxing its rapid rise from the ranks of state right organizations to a national distributor, Columbia Pictures has become a member of the Hays organization. Joe Brandt will represent the company on the Hays directorate. Columbia's move in joining the Hays association leaves Tiffany the only distributor maintaining a national exchange system which is not included in the Hays membership. Both Columbia and Tiffany have co-operated with the Hays organization in the past.

Exhibitors and Stagehands Mitt In Milwaukee

Milwaukee—Stagehands and exhibitors here have come to an agreement after a strike scare which threatened a break between the union and George Fischer, operator of the National and Milwaukee here.

The union demanded that additional stagehands be employed at these theatres "regardless of whether there is any work for them." Refusal of the owners to meet the stagehands' demands led the operators in the two theatres to threaten to go on a sympathy strike.

Under the new agreement, the five deluxe houses in the city are obliged to put in a stagehand, while the Zenith, Milwaukee, National, Avalon, Venetian, and Egyptian must hire a stagehand four hours per week at $1.25 per hour. It was further agreed that the smaller houses are not obliged to hire a stagehand.

Robberies in Indiana

Andersonville, Ind.—At the point of a gun, a bandit took $200 from the cashier of the Publix State and escaped with two companions.

Indianapolis—Two gunmen held up A. W. Hedding, manager of the Ohio theatre and forced him to open the safe, which they looted of the night's receipts. Hedding was alone in the theatre.

Princeton, Ind.—The Princeton was robbed of $219, but $461 was overlooked. The thief remained in the building after the last show.

Wash. House Robbed

Vancouver, Wash.—Knocking off the combination knob and then filling the hole with nitroglycerine, yeggs blew open the safe at the Fox Castle theatre. An inner strong box containing $1,200 defied the robbers' efforts, however, and they got less than $100, according to E. E. Marsh, manager.

"Big House" Ban Will Mean Loss Of $1,500,000

Columbus—Action of the Ohio censor board in banning "The Big House" and "all other racketeering and gangster films," as being "harmful to the boys and girls of Ohio," will result in a loss to exhibitors of $1,500,000, P. J. Wood, business manager of the state exhibitor unit, estimates.

The new order was issued after many weeks of consideration during which the administration has been accused of using the power of the censor board for political reasons. It has been claimed that the administration banned "The Big House" and with it all other prison pictures, fearing its exhibition would reawaken adverse public sentiment which prevailed at the time of the Columbus Penitentiary fire in which several hundred convicts lost their lives.

John J. Harwood, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, condemns the action of the censor board as "a very high-handed piece of business, entirely uncalled for. There's no moral reason for barring the picture, as far as I can see, and that's the only thing the board of censorship is supposed to base decisions on," said Harwood. He further stated that, in his opinion, the board "is usurping a great deal of authority."

Representatives of the local women's clubs are also opposed to the banning of "The Big House," which, according to Mrs. F. J. Yeager, president of the Cleveland Cinema Club, is listed on the club bulletin as an "excellent picture for adults."

Miss Annett Smith, chairman of the department of education of the Federated Women's Clubs, resents the action of the censor board, saying, "I don't like to think that there are people in Columbus who can keep me from seeing a moving picture so highly recommended."

Loew's Stillman, which was scheduled to play "The Big House" as soon as it passed the censor board, has been displaying a sign reading: "Coming—THE BIG HOUSE—WHEN, AS AND IF RELEASED BY THE OHIO BOARD OF CENSORS."

Hays "Sitting" On Plan to Cut Express Charges

Distribution interests affiliated with the M.P.T.D.A. are understood to be all het up over alleged laxity of Hays officials in handling a plan which might mean reduced express tariffs on film shipments for theatres and exchanges.

The plan, submitted at least six weeks ago, is said to be gathering dust in the desk of a Hays lieutenant, and this because of the belief that express companies will refuse it consideration on the grounds that other large industries will immediately charge discrimination and jump on the latter for their share of a cut.

Season Opens Without Legit in Cleveland

Cleveland—This city of over a million population is confronted with the situation of seeking all of its theatrical entertainment in motion picture theatres. For the first time in many generations the amusement season has opened without the presentation of a legitimate play. However, if announcements materialize, the Shubert Hanna theatre will present Ethel Barrymore and her daughter, Ethel Barrymore Colt, in "Scarlet Sister Mary," the end of this month. The Ohio, the home of Erlanger controlled productions ever since it was built, is dark.

Loew Profit Jumps 3 Millions for 40 Weeks

Net profit of Loew's, Inc., for the forty weeks ended June 6 is reported at $11,781,924, as compared with $8,215,034 for the same 1929 period. Operating profit for the forty weeks totaled $15,568,856, with depreciation and taxes reaching $3,786,932. These compare with $11,345,942 and $3,130,908, respectively, for the corresponding periods in 1929.

Independents Readying for Bull Market?

Independent exhibitors may expect a bull market on independently produced films within the next few months, according to John R. Freuler, head of Big 4 Films, who has just returned from the Coast, where he made a study of production conditions as they affect state right companies.

Verifying a story which appeared exclusively in Motion Picture News last week, Freuler reported renewed interest on the part of independents on the West Coast, with numerous companies preparing to start work.

"Never since the inception of the industry has the independent market presented such an attractive field as today for those pioneers who have faith in it, and the courage to act on that faith," Freuler yesterday told a representative of this publication.

"The period of novelty which the speakies have enjoyed during the past two years is ended, and something more than mere sound and talk is now necessary to infuse a lasting success to this reincarnated art.

"More and more is production talent realizing that the independent market offers a rich field, a movement which is constantly bringing to the latter field stronger directors, better stories and better actors. It now remains for the independent, with a minimum of overhead and freedom from tradition, to study audience requirements. Imbued with a belief of present day needs, such an organization may enter upon the market with optimism and a feeling of equal opportunity."

Freuler Lining Up 1930-31 Schedule for Big Four

Big 4 Film will distribute during the new season six "mellers" and two specials in addition to the previously announced series of six Westerns with Wally Wales. A deal has been closed with Craig Hutchinson for 12 two-reel comedies to be released, one every month.

M.P.T.O.A. Seeks Public Opinion On Film Tastes

Direct contact with theatre-goers, with the objective of learning the trend of public opinion and capitalizing it in production, is being sought by the M. P. T. O. A., as a result of a suggestion made at an AMPA meeting by Walter F. Wanger, Paramount general manager of production. Theatre managers are to be the local agents in the move, the information they gather being sent to general headquarters for classification and analysis. A concrete plan to put the innovation in force will be decided upon at the Philadelphia convention of the organization Nov. 10-12.

Speaking of the move, National Secretary M. J. O'Toole said: "The plan simply proposes the gathering of public opinion with respect to the kind of pictures most desired and then classifying it and making it as applicable as possible to the work of production managers. In this way they will always have something definite to guide them. The experience of the past is now their principal guide. But as public tastes change and these changes are first made evident to the theatre manager, some definite way of keeping in direct touch with this evolution in public thought will be agreed upon.

"The zones could be made the unit, with sub-districts, so as to facilitate the handling of the work. Definite lines of procedure could be followed to enable the public to make their desires known. No guarantees could possibly be given to serve this or that territory with special kind of pictures."

American distributors have protested through the American embassy that the accord plan violates the Franco-American agreement concluded in 1929.

The proposed agreement will permit French dialogue films made in Germany to enter France without being classed as quota films. French talkers made in America, however, are classed as American films and must come within the United States' quota.

Depression on The Toboggan In Pacific N. W.

Seattle—In statements issued here, executives of the Pacific Northwest's four leading chain and independent theatre organizations were unanimous in their reports of improved business conditions, and all expressed optimism for the coming season.

Earl L. Crabb, Pacific Northwest division manager of Fox West Coast Theatre, said: "Business is on the upgrade. The present depression is all mental in this territory, and with people now thinking that times are normal things are going to be all right. It is true that our theatres have been affected by the national depression, but at that I'd say business was only 10 or 15 per cent under 1929 so far this year, and it's better than 1928."

Robert Blair, Pacific Northwest division chief for Paramount Publix, was even more optimistic. "During the last few weeks our business has been far better than it was at any time during the last season," he said. "It's about the same as it was last year at this time, and better than in 1928. Last spring, conditions in Portland were supposed to be nearer normalcy than in Seattle, and our Portland house outgrossed our Seattle business for 10 weeks consecutively. But Seattle has beaten Portland for the last three weeks, with the same attractions."

Vic Gauntlett, director of advertising and publicity for John Hamrick's chain of houses in Seattle, Portland and Tacoma, said, "Sure, business is getting better. While it hasn't been as good as in 1928 or 1929, it is showing rapid signs of continued improvement."

And Leroy V. Johnson, general manager of Jensen & VonHerberg's string of downtown and suburban houses in this territory, remarked: "Business has been good with us all year, far above former averages. And it's improving now. We look for a very strong fall and winter season."

"Beam Mike," New RKO Invention, Sound Selector

Hollywood—An ear that hears only as much as it wants to is a recent development of the RKO Radio Pictures sound department. Known as a "beam" microphone, it was developed under the supervision of Carl Dreher, director of the RKO sound department, and is playing an important part in the recording of "Cimarron," starring Richard Dix.

Unlike the ordinary microphone, the "beam" mike is particularly directional, RKO says. A parabola, something akin to the reflecting surface of an automobile headlight, only five or six feet in diameter, serves as a collector of the sound. Facing the center of this parabola is the usual microphone.

Only such sounds as strike the parabola, or reflecting surface, and, rebounding, hit the microphone disc, are picked up and recorded. Regardless of the amount of noise in a vicinity, it is said, the "beam" microphone picks up substantially only that within the area at which it is pointed.

First Used in War

Something similar to the "beam" microphone was used in the World War to detect the presence of enemy planes. Later forms of the device were developed by RCA and its associated companies. The concave reflecting surface, while detecting only sounds that reach it at a certain angle, intensifies those sounds. Thus, in making long shots, the microphone can stay out of camera lines and still "hear" dialogue a considerable distance away.

The "beam" microphone was first used by RKO Radio Pictures to record "Danger Lights," in which much dialogue took place in railroad shops and around locomotives and moving trains. Because of characteristics that make it possible to blanket out practically all unwanted sounds, it is being used by RKO Radio Pictures for scenes having large groups of players in movement.

2116 Photophones Installed by RCA

Since its new equipment was introduced in February, RCA Photophone has raised its total to 2,116 sound reproducing equipments and is continuing installations at the average rate of 132 monthly, according to Sydney E. Abel, general sales manager. The stride made by the sales force under Abel's direction is emphasized by the fact that on Jan. 1, 1930, the company had 410 equipments in operation.

Sydney E. Abel

The new Photophone equipment was placed on the market Feb. 15. Since that time, replacements of several different types of equipment have been made in many theatres in various sections of the country, the company says.

Since the new equipment was placed on the market, company engineers have produced a new speaker and have added an impedance roller in the sound head. The roller is described as giving a flywheel effect which gives the film steady and uniform motion as it passes through the sound gate, thus eliminating flutter.

Television Near, Says Alexanderson

Schenectady, N. Y.—Predictions that practical television will not be perfected for a long period are discounted by Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, consulting engineer of the General Electric Co., who recently gave a successful studio-to-theatre demonstration.

"Television today is about where radio reception was in 1915," he says. "Radio made great progress in the five years that followed, but whether television will do likewise is still a question.

"We have developed sending apparatus and receiving sets, both satisfactory, but of course capable of much improvement.

"This new art is offering a great field for experiment by the thousands of amateurs, and with so much interest at hand it would seem that television should not be many years off.

"Despite the present status of television, persons should not hesitate in installing the newer type radio receivers now being offered."

$19,000 Gross By Chatterton Is Seattle High

Seattle—Following right on the heels of its record-breaking week with "Animal Crackers," the Seattle Paramount again this week piled up a prize-winning gross of $19,000 with popular Ruth Chatterton in "Anybody's Woman." This business, earning a rating of about 165%, was aided materially by the personal appearance of George Dewey Washington on the stage.

Second in the running, though considerably behind, was the Fox theatre with "Song o' My Heart." McCormack's picture grossed $13,500 (135%), which is the best business that this house has done in some weeks. The film was held for a second week.

The Fox Fifth Avenue, ordinarily a strong gross-getter, had a weak seven days with "Man Trouble," reaching only $10,480 for a rating of 90%.

Another disappointment was Al Jolson's "Big Boy," at Hamrick's Blue Mouse. This star has failed to click in this city in his last two pictures, and "Big Boy" lasted only one week, taking about $6,500 for a rating of 105%. Hamrick's Music Box, playing "The Office Wife" for a second week, was below average with approximately $5,500.

Publix's Metropolitan, as its final attraction before closing, had "The Sea God." It took about $5,600, with practically no advertising or exploitation. Fox's Coliseum continued to rate over 100% on its extended run policy, getting $3,330 with "The Last of the Duanes."

Montreal—It was a test of strength for various Montreal managers during the week, with the musicians on strike at Loew's, Imperial and Palace and also out at the Capitol. Speedy Service

One of the most remarkable instances of speedy emergency service in the equipment field was rendered by N. A. Robinson of the San Francisco branch of Electrical Research Products in the case of the Senator Theatre in Chico, 200 miles away.

At 10 o'clock on a Saturday morning word was received by telephone that vandals had destroyed the Western Electric equipment in the theatre. The destruction was so thorough as to require the replacement of all amplifiers, control cabinet, sound units and a major part of the wiring.

Replacement equipment and trained engineers were rushed from San Francisco and by 9 o'clock the same evening the theatre was showing talking pictures as usual.

"Natives" Sends Toronto Gross Down to $17,000

Toronto—Main street theatres enjoyed a period of undisturbed prosperity during the week with the outdoor season tapering off and the Canadian National exhibition over for another year.

Considerable rivalry has developed between the Imperial and Loew's, with the former presenting stage shows transplanted from the Uptown by Famous Players. The Imperial fell off to $17,000 with "Let's Go Native" following the tremendous crush for the opening week with the new policy; this total represented 95%. The picture houses had special opposition from the Royal Alexandra Theatre, where the Canadian premiere of "Abraham Lincoln" was presented with considerable emphasis on the fact that Walter Huston, portraying the title role, is a son of Toronto. "Lincoln" made $14,000, or 100%, for the week at $1.50 top. First popular price run of "All Quiet" at the Tivoli was quite at $11,000, rating 80%. Fair weather with a few showers.

One surprise of the week was the 95% mark for the British film "Atlantic," at the Imperial. Further, for the last half, "Man Trouble," with Milton Sills, drew enough at Keith's to click at 95%. It was largely fair weather, too, but easy sailing for the theatres.

"Chi" Judy House Has a K. O. Punch Grosses $5,600

Chicago—With the ritzy little Punch & Judy theatre, Chicago's lone house of swank, off to a running start at fancy prices for this town, local interest in ordinary movie palaces, apparently, died down. Grosses all around the Loop were unimpressive.

The Punch & Judy, with "Abraham Lincoln," was opened in mid-week and has been a sell-out since. First-night tickets went at $5.50 and $11 a throw, with plenty of takers, but a sprinkling of obviously "invited" guests, makes the gross for the night indefinite. Regular price for the two-a-day is $1 and $2.50, with capacity houses for the first four days returning $5,600 (210%).

"Journey's End" was second best with $21,000 (140%) for its first five days at the Roosevelt. First time for the picture here at popular prices. "The Spoilers" gave McVickers $34,500 (122%) in its second week, and "Bride of the Regiment" did $4,750 (158%) in its fourth week at the Castle, playing to adults only. "Leathernecking" got only $8,000 (70%) at the Woods, and was replaced at the end of its first week by "Africa Speaks." Ohio Landmark Goes

Cincinnati—With sale of the property to make way for a business skyscraper, work of demolishing the Lubin has commenced. The house, once a popular second-run grind stand in the heart of the business section, is one of the oldest theatres in town.

Cause of Malnutrition

Much of the noise heard around Broadway these days is blamed by Life upon the squawks of important actors and actresses re-echoing among the tall buildings as the artists recount tales of woe regarding unemployment. A visit to the office of a successful producer brought the following conversation, and subsequent information, to light. The producer called an agent of a musical comedy star. "I would like to have Miss —— in my next show. How much does she want? . . . What! Fifteen hundred a week! Nerts!" And bang went the receiver. The one chance for Broadway shows to compete with the movies is in the reduction of ticket prices. The one way in which it will be possible for this to be brought about is through lower salaries for stars. Business depression has made it necessary for other businesses to cut huge slices from the incomes of important executives . . . why not important stage performers? Thespians are a temperamental lot—and never so temperamental as when money is concerned (as who isn't) so there will be plenty more hollering before they get together and decide to do something constructive about it. In the meantime they will hang around cussing Hoover and the talkies.

170% Rating Sends "Clay" To Top Spot

Cincinnati—Although the sum total of grosses at local houses fell somewhat below the aggregate returns for last week, in individual cases houses registered substantial gains, notably the Capitol, with "Common Clay," which brought in returns to the extent of an even $22,000, equivalent to 170%, as compared with takings of $15,600, or 120%, for "Follow Through" last week.

"Animal Crackers," at the Palace, held for a second week, failed to duplicate the high gross of the initial seven days, the second showing resulting in a gate of $15,000, which, translated into percentages, means 107%, but this is considered very satisfactory business for a hold-over, and is on a par with the intake for some other pictures which have been shown for a single week. The picture moves to the Family for four days at reduced admissions.

The Albee, vaudefilm house, with "Big Boy" as screen feature, chalked up a gross of $27,350, for a rating of 125%, which is a shade better than the record of the previous seven days. "Song o' My Heart," at the Lyric, showed a gross of $13,100, or 109%, which is about an even break for this house as compared with "Moby Dick," the prior picture.

The Strand, inaugurating the first week of reduced scale of admissions with "Not Damaged," rang in at $5,100, or a rating of 145%. This, too, was the first week of a new policy at the Family, now playing split instead of full weeks, with reduced scale, "The Lone Rider," for first half, ringing the bell at $2,825, or 145%, with "She's My Weakness," last half, showing $1,515 for a 150% rating.

Omaha—Ralph W. Thayer, manager of the RKO Orpheum here for the past year, has been promoted to city manager at Dayton in charge of the Keith, Colonial, State and Strand. He will be succeeded by Roy L. Pearce, one time manager of the World here, and more recently manager of the RKO St. Louis, St. Louis.

Polly Resists Robbers

Evansville, Ind.—About everything easily removable was stolen recently from the Victory theatre here, except Eva, a parrot, who is unofficial hostess on the mezzanine floor. Eva has a strong dislike of being handled. Theatre employees heard her cries and arrived to find her strutting on the floor with blood on her beak, evidence of a victory over the would-be abductor. Some canaries, however, were not so fortunate.

"Spoilers" Tops Portland Lineup; Business Good

Portland, Ore.—Downtown picture business held to good business, with Gary Cooper and excellent cast in "The Spoilers" at the Paramount annexing the bulk of the business. Manager Conrad Holmes and staff made excellent tie-ups with book stores and library, which helped considerably, augmented by another Gourfain stage show, "Looney Lunatics," headed by Happy "Phil" Lampkin, and Con Maffie had the usual number of organ novelties.

Fox Broadway, with a popular golf offering, "Love in the Rough" also proved most gratifying, plus the "Wild and Woolly" idea interpreted by Fanchon & Marco, and Henri LeBel at Wurlitzer.

Four Brazilian Houses Wire

Washington—Trade Commissioner Sheahan, of Rio de Janeiro, reports to the Dept. of Commerce the installation of sound in four additional houses at Brazil. At Rio, the National and Guanabara wired, at Recife, the Ideal, and the new Sao Paulo theatre, Santa Cecilia, a 2,400 seater.

McCormack and Cook Only Balto Runs Hitting Par

Baltimore—Patronage at the big house here was slightly off during the week, although the weather was fair and hot during the early days and temperate during the latter with shows Tuesday night. Neighborhood business, however, appears to be increasing steadily, auguring well for a bang-up season in residential sections.

At the New theatre, "Song o' My Heart," starring John McCormack, did very finely, the gross reported as $13,500, rating 135%. This may have been aided to a great extent by the special performance given prior to the engagement for the Catholic clergy and clever newspaper advertising.

"Rain or Shine," with Joe Cook in the starring role, pulled strongly at the Rivoli, where the rating was figured at 110% and the gross at $8,800. Cook appears to have a strong following among theatre-goers here and the Rivoli's new cooling system is probably an aid to good business.

At Loew's Stanley, Ernst Lubitsch's "Monte Carlo," gradually built throughout the week, winding up with a gross figured at $18,200, giving this house a rating for the week of 104%. Beautiful music and singing in this production proved a treat to the high-class clientele.

"Moby Dick" fell off during its second week at the Auditorium, with a gross for the six days figured at $2,970 and the rating at 45%. Again the road show price of $1 may have hurt business, particularly now that patrons know they will be able to see the same picture later at the neighborhood houses for lower prices.

Competition

'Crackers' Takes $20,000; Others In Cleveland Off

Cleveland—This was not such a hot week along the Rialto. No definite reason can be assigned to a drop all along the line, except that it might have been just a natural reaction after the previous big week.

The Four Marx Brothers in "Animal Crackers" did the best business of all downtown first-runs, but it did not reach the high goal expected from reports of runs in other cities.

Perhaps getting several hundred thousand children off to school proved too much for the public at large. Maybe the pictures were not to the popular public taste. Inasmuch as there was little variety, most of the houses offering western and outdoor melodramas, the same conditions prevailed for all the runs. "Animal Crackers," of course, being excepted. Weather was ideal. Bright, clear, sunny days, and clear, comfortably cool evenings.

$29,000 Grossed By 'Golden West' High in Boston

Boston—With the premiere of First National's "Girl of the Golden West," Keith Memorial hit its highest point since the early opening days of that theatre with a gross of $29,000, rating 150%. Many nights found patrons turned away. Equally heavy patronage was given "Hell's Angels," Boston's only road show, at the Tremont, where it hit $16,000 for its second week, also rating 150%.

"Follow Thru" went over for $40,000 at the Metropolitan for a rating of 125%, one of the highest grosses in weeks. "Not Damaged," at the Keith Albee, was good at 120% with a gross of $22,500. Both Loew theatres were up this week, the State doing $24,000 with "Love in the Rough" and the Orpheum $23,500 with "Dough Boys."

"Manslaughter" remained in town at the Scollay Square, where it hit $18,000 for a rating of 133%; not so bad for a second showing. "Big Boy" grossed $30,500, playing day and date at the Olympia and Uptown.

Wednesday's business fell pretty flat because of the monster Tercentenary parade which demoralized traffic and made it almost impossible to get into the theatre district; otherwise even greater grosses would have been hung up. The figures are virtually for a six-day week because of the Wednesday tie-up. Weather was fair, variable temperature.

"Flesh" $40,000 Intake in Phila. Is Only Average

Philadelphia—The first complete week of the musicians' strike had apparently no effect on business in Philadelphia, except that grosses were held down to a strictly average level. Since the Mastbaum claims an $8,000 to $10,000 outlay for its orchestra and stage shows, they have a distinct profit on the week. The other two houses, Earle and Fox, fared accordingly well.

With "Call of the Flesh," the Mastbaum grossed $40,000, or summer average. The Earle started weakly, but, having a Milton Sills picture, the business jumped with the news of the star's death to $18,000 for the week. The Fox, with a Jack Oakie picture, "Let's Go Native," ran a trifle over $27,000, or good average.

This week, the Mastbaum is presenting Joe E. Brown in a spot on the stage without musical accompaniment and the act got over well at the opening, indicating that the second week of the strike will hold up to a good average. Fox is counting on a good week, too, with another Milton Sills picture, "The Sea Wolf." The real test of the situation will occur when these houses have just average productions, with no side features to help the gross.

"Moby Dick" took a dive to $12,000 for its second week, a tremendous drop under the $25,000 gross of the first week. "The Big House" held up to $8,000, or 80% business for its ninth and last week.

Scrambled bookings were in effect during the week. The Fox played its first Paramount film under its new contract with "Let's Go Native," while the Earle—a Warner theatre—played the first-run picture, under the Warner-Fox deal in "Man Trouble."

Broadway Has a Quiet Week, with "Angels" in Lead

With but one exception, and that the continued sensational pace set by the double run of "Hell's Angels," main stem theatres along Broadway in New York experienced a dull week at box office windows. The current week, however, has perked up considerably, with cooler weather sending many suburbanites into town for evening performances. The two-day Jewish holiday on Wednesday and Thursday likewise proved a bonanza for the downtown picture palaces.

French Machines Favored Over U. S. In British Malay

Washington—Persia, where new theatre building has jumped tremendously in recent months, and British Malay, are newest territories covered in the U. S. government report on equipment conditions in foreign lands. Complete reports follow, as part of the regular series which appears weekly in Motion Picture News.

The possibilities for the sale of projectors and equipment in British Malaya are small and limited.

BRITISH MALAYA

From Report by Donald W. Smith, Ass't. Trade Commissioner, Singapore

Projectors.—Although there are a number of different projectors to be found on the market, the scarcity of theatres necessarily restricts sales to about a dozen a year. The Pathé projector is the most popular machine because of simplicity of operation and low price. As the local representative of the Pathé projector is also the distributor for films, his machines are readily sold through his close contact with operators of cinemas.

An American machine is probably the next most popular projector. Its high price and complicated mechanism, however, tend to retard its sales.

German machines also find favor, the Bauer and the Hahn Goertz projectors both being popular, the former on account of its price and the latter because of certain distinctive mechanical features. There are several other makes of projectors for sale on the market, such as Aubert, New Austral, Indomitable, and another American machine, but the total sales of these projectors are so small that they can not be considered as important.

The local retail prices of the leading makes are as follows; Pathé, $450; American make, $850; Bauer, $450; Hahn Goertz, $550.

Owing to the fact the the majority of the theatres in Malaya cater to native or Chinese audiences, theatre owners in selecting a projector are governed mainly by price; on the other hand, as all of the operators are usually Malay natives, simplicity of construction and operation are also essential selling points.

There are no firms handling projectors and equipment exclusively in the territory. Such goods are sold through the local distibutors.

In British Malaya there are only about six theatres equipped with more than one projector, these being the two leading theatres in Singapore, Kuala Lumpur, and Penang. It is doubtful whether the smaller theatres will ever find it necessary to be equipped with more than one machine.

Most of the projectors now in use in this territory are old models. Even the first-run houses are using old equipment; one of the leading theatres in Singapore, for example, is using a machine over six years old. Second-hand projectors find a ready market among the small native theatres.

The American projectors in operation are giving complete satisfaction. A local film distributor, however, who stocks spare parts for almost every machine, states that, according to his experience, the American machines are giving no better service than the other makes.

Generators.—The sale possibilities of American generator sets are small, owing to the fact that in the smaller towns the theatre owners would have to install their own engines to operate the generators. The larger theatres in Singapore, Penang, and Kuala Lampur are already using generator sets and apparently are not inclined to make a change.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—High-intensity arcs are not used, but mirror arcs of low amperage are used by most of the houses. The screens in use are very crude and are locally made. It is extremely difficult to induce exhibitors to purchase a screen costing more than $50.

Visual Education.—The government has made no attempt to introduce visual education in the schools. In any case, owing to the strong pro-British influence, it is not likely that American films would be allowed to be exhibited in local schools.

PERSIA

TEHERAN

From Report by Henry S. Villard and David Williamson, American Vice Consuls

The past few months have witnessed an extraordinary growth in the popularity of motion pictures in Persia, the number of houses having nearly tripled in that time. Less than a year ago there were but four in Teheran and an estimated total of five in all the rest of Persia, while today Teheran has 10 flourishing houses, and at least 16 others are known to be in operation in different parts of the country.

This remarkable change is ascribed in part to the permission recently granted to women to enter public places, such as cafés, restaurants, and theatres. With their new freedom, the women seem to find in the motion picture a particularly strong appeal, and they compose a large portion of the audience at every performance.

In Teheran, the capital, the names and seating capacity of the theatres at present doing business are as follows:

	Seating Capacity
Sepah	900
Pathé	800
Maiak	700
Iran	670
Ferdovsy	650
Lalezar	600
Teheran	500
Golestan	350
Chahpur	350
Peri	300

Only two of these, the Iran and Peri, were in operation in the spring of 1929. Two others, the Grand and the Zoroastrian, have disappeared, and the rest have been newly established.

The total number of seats is thus placed at 5,820, which, however, will be increased during the summer when films are exhibited in an open-air theatre located in the public park. In addition, the Palace Cinema, now being erected on the Avenue Hedayat, will have a seating capacity of 1,000 and when finished will be the finest house in Persia.

Whereas a year ago Tabriz, Resht, Pahlavi, Isfahan, and Meshed were the only other towns in Persia to boast of a theatre, the first three cities now have two each, and Kermanshah, which had none, now also has two. Other cities which in 1929 saw the installation of theatres for the first time were Kazvin, Barfurush, Bandar Gaz, Sultanabad, Hamadan, and Ahwas. It is reported that in Bushire, Seistan, and one or two other places theatres have also been opened, but details are as yet lacking.

Perhaps a grand total of 13,600 seats is a fairly accurate estimate for the entire country, with the likelihood that this will increase steadily from now on.

The range of admission prices in Teheran is from one to five krans (10 to 50 cents), with loge and box seats at 10 krans (approximately $1). One theatre restricts its prices to six krans and eight krans, and another has loge seats at 20 krans as well as at 10 krans. In the provinces, the average price of admission is three krans.

Most of the theatres in Persia are large rectangular halls equipped with benches and with chairs held together in rows by means of boards. Many of the halls have been converted from other uses and are not especially adapted to the exhibition of motion pictures. The lowest-priced seats are near the screen, while the rest of the chairs, either of hardwood or cane, command a scale of prices depending on how far they are removed from the front. Since there is no slope to the aisles, the best seats are in the loges, which are at the rear of the hall and raised above the level of the floor. Some of the theatres have small balconies.

There is usually an orchestra of two, three or four pieces, stationed behind a screen at one corner of the stage. A few of the larger theatres advertise seven or eight-piece orchestras, but a full roll call of the members is unusual. The music generally consists of a piano, violin, and drums. Pipe organs are unknown.

Heating of the theatres is effected by means of tin stoves, but in the winter it is generally cold notwithstanding, and most of the audience keep on their overcoats during the performance.

Projectors.—Nearly all projectors in use in Persia are Pathé machines. No theatre has more than one projector, but those employed are all fairly recent models. The reputation of the Pathé firm, coupled with the fact that an able demonstrator installed the machines when purchased, has probably been the factor in determining the theatre owners in their choice of French equipment. No American projectors are in use. In Teheran, the 220-volt alternating current of the municipal electric-light plant used with a transformer provides the power for most machines. Since few other municipalities have electric equipment, projectors elsewhere take a 110-volt current generated by their own power plants.

Two firms in Teheran have expressed interest in handling American projectors. They would confine themselves to the theatrical type of projector, since the electric current in Teheran is inadequate to permit the general use of projectors.

Generators.—Generator sets are used only in industries where the cost of power is a negligible factor. Theatres are not exceedingly prosperous and consequently are satisfied with buying their current from municipal or private suppliers. The fact that the current often fails in the middle of a reel does not seem to increase their desire to buy generator sets. Such sets are practically unknown in Persia, and none are in use as far as is able to ascertain.

Where the public current is not used in the Teheran theatres, a rectifier is sometimes used. Three such devices are in use in Teheran, and it is estimated that two other theatres employ it. They are of French make and cost approximately $12.

It would appear that the sale in Persia of American generators depends upon the general development of not only the industry, but also of the use of electricity and electric equipment.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—High-intensity reflectors arc lamps are in use in the theatres in Teheran. Both horizontal and vertical lamps are installed. They are all Pathé equipment. Each theatre is equipped with one arc lamp. Plain linen screens are used.

Visual Education.—There is at present no possibility for the sale of motion picture material to the Persian Government. The ministry of education, which has all matters pertaining to education under its supervision, has made no move toward adopting the visual method of instruction. No budgeting provisions are made for the purchase of projectors or films, and from the general position of education in Persia the guess may be hazarded that no such provision will be made for some time to come.

THE quality of acting in talking pictures is improving at a gratifying rate, but scant progress is being made in the direction or in story construction—a state of affairs which indicates that conditions in Hollywood are just what they were in the old days.

The early talkers were in the nature of experiments, and while crude and awkward in form, they displayed evidences of an enforced originality. New people and new methods in the movie industry inevitably produced some new ideas.

Now, however, the old laws of standardization are once more in force. The impulse toward experimentation has been crushed beneath the grinding wheels of the Hollywood mills. Pictures are being turned out as Ford cars are turned out, and before long it will be almost impossible to distinguish one from another. Every so often, of course, there will be a notable exception; but it will instantly be overwhelmed by the legions of its imitators. A George Arliss, for example, may achieve distinguished success in a picture like Disraeli, and then appear in so many faint copies of Disraeli that the public will grow tired of him, just as it grew tired of Adolph Menjou, Charles Ray, Mary Miles Minter, Thomas Meighan, Constance Talmadge and all other over-worked stars.

One promising young actress has lately been saved from untimely obscurity by a startling erformance in what, for her, was an entirely new type of role. Nancy Carroll was just beginning to be dully monotonous as a cute little madcap, when she was assigned the leading part in The Devil's Holiday.—Sherwood in McCall's.

Canadian White List

Ottawa—The Canadian Council on Child Welfare has just published its fifth "white list" of motion pictures suitable for children. With the growing use of talking pictures, it is noteworthy that these lists have been getting shorter, the present publication containing only 14 approved features.

In alphabetical order, the latest list comprises the following: "Around the Corner," "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland," "The Devil's Holiday," "The Flirting Widow," "Follies of 1930," "Grumpy," "The Hide Out," "In Gay Madrid," "Mountain Justice," 'Rogue Song," "Sarah and Son," "So This Is London," "Swing High" and "True to the Navy."

CECIL B. DeMILLE . . . has odd ideas, including a desire to dominate the scene when some persons call upon him. He uses bright lights to study the expressions of visitors and is said to have an uncomfortable chair so that he can watch persons trying to look comfortable when they are ill at ease.

The fact that some, and not a few, persons do not agree with Mr. DeMille about his productions amuses rather than vexes him. He is a good sport who is not precisely noted for his modesty. At luncheon he deprecated the idea of changing titles of books and plays for the film off-spring, particularly when a frenzied attempt was made to appeal to passing moths before a flaming theatre marquee. This same producer nevertheless took all manner of liberties with Sir James Barrie's play, "The Admirable Crichton," which, because it was feared some persons would expect Crichton to be an officer of high naval rank instead of a highly intelligent butler, emerged from the film studio as "Male and Femalc."

But be that as it may, Mr. DeMille has amassed a great fortune out of his pictures, and even if he does dote on polar bear rugs and Italian bells at the door of his studio luncheon room, he does not resent anybody disagreeing with him; that is, provided one is not a member of his staff and is not engaged in either mapping out or directing a picture. But perhaps after all that has been said about him, Mr. DeMille might intentionally humor a daring no-man by listening to him to see the effect it might have on the physiognomy of the victim as well as on the camera men, electricians, carpenters and the youngster who follows at Mr. DeMille's heels, not to mention the actors.—New York Times.

WE'VE always been a hound for the institution of universal and straight percentage in this motion picture amusement business. Last week we overheard two exhibitors lamenting their experiences on a high picture rental and a sharing contract with a guarantee gross. Both were correct in their contentions. By all the laws of equitable economics in this business of whimsical and fairyland appeal, a sharing plan should be a fixed and permanent policy. We may be an impractical dreamer, but we believe that with the set-up this industry has, between producer and exhibitor, that a perfectly safe, protective and easily workable sharing system can be established, based on actual values of each attraction, with exhibitor and distributor taking their equitable part of profit or loss as the case may be. Accurate and confidential checking in the small towns is the easiest part of such a system to formulate. Fear, and lack of that spirit of confidence and co-operation so vitally necessary, must be the bogey man in the dark.—Pacific Coast Exhibitor, San Francisco.

PRODUCERS value so little the one thing they have to sell—the flow of motion on the screen—that they pay people to interrupt it.

At first it was a lowly occupation, and those who followed it were called gagmen. The salaries of the best interrupters grew beyond such a common little word as gag, and after solemn deliberation they called themselves comedy constructers.

They drew salaries for stepping in when a dramatic story became dramatic, and injecting a corking bit of comedy that always in the past had been a sure-fire laugh.

Some of the studios for a time actually made a practice of giving credit on the screen to those who exercised their ingenuity in thinking up things to spoil pictures. Comedy constructers seem to have passed, but the fearful habit of injecting "comedy relief" still persists.

At his best the comedy constructer's mission is to kill in one minute the effect that the picture has struggled for fifteen minutes to obtain, to halt abruptly the progress the story is making, and to stick in something as out of place as a pig at a wedding.—Beaton in New Republic.

We are forwarding to the larger producers a suggestion which, if acted upon, will save them a lot of trouble. Raps U. S. Control

Montreal—Members of the Advertising Club of Montreal heard an address by S. Morgan-Powell, dramatic critic of the Montreal Star, in which he criticized the control of the motion picture industry by United States interests and urged the making of talking pictures in Canada because of the influence now exerted on young Canadians by the United States film product. He did not believe the Hollywood pictures superior, from a technical point of view, to those made in Germany or England.

Canada could produce pictures that would compete with Hollywood productions, he believed, but the problem to be faced was that of distribution.

THE death of Lon Chaney removes from the motion picture world one of its most interesting characters. What seemed the misfortune of his childhood proved one of the chief sources of his later fame; both his parents were deaf mutes, and his later gift for pantomine is attributed to the necessity he faced from his earliest days of conveying his emotions and thoughts by gesture and facial expression. To this training were added intelligence and remarkable pertinacity. His exceptional genius for make-up made his name familiar to every one, and in his first talking picture he revealed that he could alter his voice almost in the same astonishing way as he had previously altered his face. But, like Charlie Chaplin, he continued to believe that pantomime was the peculiar art of the screen. He was probably mistaken in this, but he was not mistaken in his belief that pantomime could still have retained an important place. Unfortunately, like so many other recent inventions, the talkies seem to have become a stern master rather than a useful servant, and the ability to reproduce the voice on the screen has been interpreted to mean that the voice must be used, regardless of the consequences.—The Nation.

THERE is no hope for William Haines to retain his popularity so long as Metro-Goldwyn see fit to keep giving him roles that make him behave like a jackass. "Way Out West" is another of these. This is really a crime. Mr. Haines has talent. He can do pathos better than any other young actor on the screen and is a convincing exponent of romantic characterizations. We might also add that the audience found little amusement in Mr. Haines' smart-Alecking the night we saw the terrible thing.—Life.

THERE are a few exhibitors so unfortunately constituted that they can find no good in any suggestions emanating from any other source than their own mentalities. They regard as a distinct work of the devil any proposition made by the producers no matter how good it might be to their own advantage to co-operate.

Facts of the matter are that producers realize excessive protection has been granted in the past to some of the large film buyers. They realize also that this protection does not work out to their own advantage any more than it does to that of the exhibitor in general. And, since their interests are mutual, they seek to get together with the exhibitors on a matter of more equitable adjustment.

They do not seek to further the interests of their chains, but rather to curb the power of the chains to hold back the product from the subsequent runs. In this the non-chain exhibitor benefits equally with the producer, if indeed he is not the greater gainer. Merely because the proposition comes from the Hays organization is no reason why this object should be defeated. It should merely be a question of whether or not the exhibitor will be benefitted. There cannot be two answers to this question. Anything that will bring earlier delivery to the subsequent runs is earnestly to be desired no matter with whom the original suggestion may originate. — The Exhibitor, Philadelphia.

"Just to be different" is why Jack Warner ordered all ads in the daily papers on the return of the Larry Ceballos stage shows to carry the spelling "Review" instead of "Revue."

At least that takes the burden off the theatre p. a., whoever he is (they change pretty fast out there), that gentleman having been the object of considerable sarcastic comment with the 24-sheets on the Ceballos shows carrying one spelling and the newspaper ads carrying the other.

Thus does one of the great Barons of Babbleburg toss aside petty little precepts that were made merely for the benefit of the little fellows, "who also serve." With the force of his personality, Professor Warner has swept aside mere spelling precedent and discarded annoying tradition and has now become "different."

By John F. Rider

WE KNOW that the presence of a condenser in an A.C. circuit will manifest an influence which will control the value of the current through the circuit. We further know that this controlling action is a function of frequency. Namely that the reactance of the condenser, sometimes known as the permittance is a function of the frequency and of the capacity. We noted that when a voltage is impressed across a resistance, the current in the circuit is limited by the resistance and that a certain amount of power is expended in the resistance. What are the power relations in an alternating circuit containing only a condenser with negligible resistance. As to the statement relative to the resistance, the condition of a 90° current lead is in itself an indication of a perfect capacity. Any deviation from this condition would produce a current lead of less than 90°. As a matter of fact the absolute action in the ordinary condenser is such that the current lead is not 90°. Each and every condenser possesses a certain amount of resistance. However, this resistance is usually of such small value that it i classed a being negligible and the theoretical state of perfection is assumed.

The power in a circuit is equal to the instantaneous value of e x i at that instant. If we refer to figure 61C, we note that at four instants during a complete cycle the product of ei is O. These instants are at the 0° when the current is maximum and the voltage is zero; at the 90° point when the voltage is maximum and the current is zero; at the 180° when the voltage is zero and the current is maximum and at the 270° point when the current is zero and the voltage is maximum. Further, between the points 0° and 90°, the product of e x i is positive (above the zero line), and between the points 90° and 180°, it is negative because e is positive and i is negative. A similar condition exists between the 180° and 270° points and between the 270° and 360° points. If we multiply the instantaneous values of ei, we would secure a power curve such as that shown in figure 61C. The heights of these curves represent the value of the power at each instant during the cycle. Energy is taken from the supply during the first quarter of the cycle, i.e. between the 0° and the 90° points and the average value of the power loop within this period is equal to the average power taken from the line, and the area of this loop represents the total amount of energy stored within the condenser during that period. Continuing with time, we note that during the next quarter cycle between the 90° and the 180° points, the condenser is discharging, since the applied voltage is gradually decreasing, and the power loop is negative. Now, the average value of this loop, is the average power during this cycle and the area of this loop is the total amount of energy FED BACK into the supply by the condenser.

We said that the theoretical condenser has no losses. If now, the total energy taken from the supply during one part of the cycle is returned to the supply during the next quarter of a cycle, the average power taken from the supply during a complete cycle is zero.

According to a previously stated equation, the power expended in the circuit is

$P = EI \cos 90° = 0$

Condenser and Resistance In Series.—Let us now assume a case where the capacity is not perfect. Let us say that an appreciable amount of resistance is present in the active surfaces of the capacity and between the connecting leads to the active plates. Such a condition is the equivalent of a perfect condenser with a series resistance. It is also possible to imagine a circuit containing a resistance in series with a capacity without any special reference to the coniditon of the condenser. The schematic of such an arrangement is as shown in figure 61D, where R is a resistance of 10 ohms and C is a large capacity of 1000 microfarads. The value of E is 110 volts.

An examination of this circuit brings to light two significant facts. From what was said in connection with resistance and capacity, we note two controlling agents, namely the resistance and the capacity. Both of these will have some effect upon the magnitude of current which shall flow in the circuit. Each one offers a certain amount of opposition and the two combined, offer a total amount of hindrance. The resistance R offers a certain amount of resistance, whereas the capacity C offers a certain amount of reactance. At first glance one would imagine that by adding the resistance and the reactance in ordinary algebraic fashion, that is would afford the total hindrance. Such is not the case because of the phase relation existing between current and voltage with a resistance in the circuit and with a capacity in the circuit. The current and voltage are in phase across the resistance, but the current leads the voltage across the capacity. We must now determine a new value, one which would take into consideration the phase relation between the current and voltage with two such elements in series in the circuit, a value which would represent the total hindrance to current flow, by all the elements in the circuit. This value is known as the IMPEDANCE, and in this case has two components, the resistance of R and the reactance of C. Let us continue and determine the relations present in this circuit.

E applied = 110 volts
R = 10 ohms
C = 1000 microfarads
F = 60 cycles

The reactance Xc of the circuit is

$$Xc = \frac{1{,}000{,}000}{6.28 \times 60 \times 1000} = 2.65 \text{ ohms}$$

Rider Discusses Condensers

Power in condenser circuits and the effect of a resistance in series with a condenser are the highlights of Lesson 18, in John Rider's "Sound Projection Course" which appears weekly in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Rider follows up with a discussion on the retarding effect of an inductance in an A.C. circuit, inductive reactance, impedance in A.C. circuits, concluding with an investigation on the power relation in an A.C. circuit containing only an inductance.

Because of the phase relation, the total opposition or hindrance introduced by the elements must be determined by adding the equivalent resistance value (individual opposition effects) at right angles or vectorially, such as would be employed to determine the hypothenuse of a right triangle. Knowing the resistance of R and the reactance of C the total hindrance or IMPEDANCE of the circuit (designated by the capital letter Z) is

$= 10.34$ ohms

A previous statement was made that when a capacity only is used in an A.C. circuit the current in that circuit is which is a form of Ohm's law. When the circuit contains more than one element and the total hindrance is the impedance Z of that circuit, the value of I is determined in a similar manner but R in Ohm's law is now replaced by Z, viz:

$$I = \frac{E}{Z}$$ and if we substitute the above values

$$I = \frac{110}{10.34}$$

(We shall call this value 10.64 amperes.)

According to the definition of what constitutes a series circuit, 10.64 amperes of current flows through R and C. We have two voltage drops in this circuit, that across R and that across C or Xc, hence IR and IXc. Now, as in the case of total hindrance, the sum of IR and IXc does not equal the E applied. While it is true that a voltmeter which will indicate A.C. voltages when connected across R and C will show that

$IR = 10.64 \times 10$
and $IXc = 10.64 \times 2.65$
$= 28.19$ volts

the arithmetic sum of these voltage is greater than the applied. But when added vectorially,

$E = \sqrt{IR^2 + IXc^2}$

Now, while the theoretical condition of a 90° current lead in the condenser holds true in the condenser, the phase difference between the current and voltage in the complete circuit is neither 90° as determined by the condenser or 0 as determined by the resistance. It is some value between 0° and 90° and current leading because of the predominating influence of the condenser. The power factor of the circuit is

and $\theta = 14.75°$ ***

(When cos θ is known, reference to a table of natural sines and cosines will show the value of θ)

The power dissipated in the circuit is

$P = E I \times \cos \theta = 110 \times 10.64 \times .967$
$= 1132$ watts

The power dissipated may also be determined from

This Is Lesson 18 in The Rider Series on Sound Projection

$P = I^2R = 10.64^2 \times 10$
$= 1132$ watts.

A.C. Circuit Containing Inductance Only.—We are somewhat familiar with the reaction present when a voltage is applied across an inductance. We know that the current does not instantaneously rise to its maximum value, that it lags behind the voltage. This property is utilized in many ways. Before showing the application of inductance, let us consider the action in an A.C. circuit which contains only inductance. Such a circuit is impossible in actual practice since every inductance consists of wire and wire has resistance. However, for the sake of clarity we can assume a perfect inductance without resistance.

Suppose that such a coil were connected across a source of A.C. as in figure 62A. A current meter is connected to indicate the current in the circuit and we also have a voltmeter which indicates the voltage in the circuit. One such voltmeter is connected across the line and one meter across the inductance. We assume that the periodicity of the line supply voltage is sufficiently low to enable visual observation upon the meters of the variations in magnitude of the voltage and current.

Let us further imagine that the line voltage is applied at the instant when it is zero in the curve. In other words E applied is zero. Now we know from the discussion of inductances in D.C. circuits that when current is caused to flow through an inductance, an emf of self induction is developed. W shall designate this voltage as E_L in the curve. Keeping in mind that the inductance is theoretically free from resistance, the first small increment of voltage applied causes the greatest flow of current through the circuit, since there is as yet no reaction in the system. Thus the applied voltage E and the emf of self inductance E_L are both zero and the current I_L is maximum. As the line voltage starts to increase in the negative direction, there occurs a change in current and this change of flux creates an emf of self induction across the inductance. This is E_L. This voltage is of such direction that it tends to stop the change of the current I_L and to send current in the opposite direction. There is therefore a gradual reduction in the magnitude of current flowing through the coil. As the applied voltage E increases still more, there continues to be a change of current and a change of flux, gradually increasing the emf of self-induction and gradually decreasing the current through the coil. When the applied voltage is maximum, the voltage E_L is also maximum and since these two voltages are of equal magnitude and opposite in effect, the current through the coil is zero.

Now, as the voltage applied starts to decrease, there occurs a change in the voltage across the coil and current starts to flow. As the voltage E decreases still more, the emf of self induction likewise decreases as the retarding effect upon the current flow also decreases. At the time when the applied voltage E is zero, the voltage E_L is also zero and the current I_L is maximum. At this instant, the current is stationary at its value and since there is no change of flux there can be no voltage developed across the coil. Such is the start of the cycle as shown in figure 62B. Now, if we consider that the voltage applied and the voltage across the coil are maximum and the current is zero, we note that the voltage E passes through its zero point 90° ahead of the current, or that the current lags the voltage by 90° in an inductive circuit, i.e. when the inductance has negligible resistance.

Referring once more to figure 62B, the value of the current I_L must be such that the reaction voltage, the emf of self induction will be equal to the applied voltage. Expressed in another manner, the emf of self-induction is the current limitation agent in the circuit. If we start with m applied E and MM E_L at maximum values, the current changes from 0 to maximum in one quarter cycle and during this period the emf of self-induction likewise changes from maximum to zero. Since the frequency is f cycles, the period during which the aforementioned changes take place is $\frac{1}{4}f$ second. Now, the emf of self induction depends upon two quantities. First, the turns in the coil, or the inductance of the coil, designated as L. Second, by the time rate of change of the current. This is shown in the curve.

Since the current remains constant for an instant at its maximum value there is no change of flux and there is no voltage induced in the turns of the inductance, hence no E_L. Accordingly, the average voltage across the inductance during that quarter cycle is

$$= L \times \text{Im} \times 4f \quad (a)$$
$$\text{Also} \quad \text{Em} = \frac{\pi}{2} \times \text{Eav} \quad (b)$$
$$\text{Therefore Em} = \frac{\pi}{2} \times L \times \text{Im} \times 4f \quad (c)$$
$$\text{which is} = 2\pi f \times L \times \text{Im} \quad (d)$$
$$\text{and} \quad \text{Eeff.} = 2\pi f \times L \times \text{Ieff} \quad (e)$$

and the current in the circuit is, in effective values,

$$I = \frac{E}{2\pi F \times L} \quad (61)$$

Suppose we imagine that L in figure 62A is 10 henrys and the frequency of E applied is 60 cycles. The maximum current in the circuit is 1 ampere. Substituting into equation 60,

Eav. $= 10 \times (1/1/240)$

The value 1/240 is secured as follows. If the line frequency is 60 cycles per second, the duration of a cycle is 1/60 second and one quarter of a cycle is 1/240 second. Now, the term 1/1/240 is the reciprocal of the reciprocal, which becomes the whole number since 1/240 is equal to .004166 and 1/.004166 is equal to 240. Hence 4f is equal to 240, since f is 60, and equation 60 a becomes

Eav. $= 10 \times 240$
$= 2440$ volts

The quantity $\pi/2$ is equal to 3.1416/2 or 1.5707. Then equation 60b becomes

Em $= 2400 \times 1.5707$
$= 3770$ volts

and equation 60b and c are the same. The quantity $(\pi/2) \times 4f$ is equal to the angular velocity $2\pi f$, hence equation 60d becomes

Em $= 6.28 \times 60 \times 10 \times 1$
$= 377 \times 10 \times 1$
$= 3770$ volts

and since Eeff $= .707 \times$ Em and Ieff. $= .707 \times$ Im then equation 60e becomes

Ecff. $= 377 \times 10 \times .707$
$= 2665$ volts

and equation 61 becomes

$= .707$ ampere effective.

As is evident in equation 61, the term $2\pi fL$, is the equivalent of R in Ohm's Law for current. As was stated in connection with capacity reaction, this term is the inductance reaction and is also stated as reactance and expressed in ohms. Just as capacity reactance is expressed by the capital letter X and the subscript C, inductive reactance is also designated by the capital letter X, but the subscript is L, thus

Inductive Reactance $= X_L = 2\pi f L \quad (62)$

Now, if we examine this equation, we note two peculiarities. Both are opposite to that related to capacity reactance. Whereas capacity reactance decreases with frequency, inductive reactance is proportional to frequency. If the inductance is constant, and the frequency is doubled, the reactance will increase twofold. If the frequency is half constant and the inductance is doubled, the reactance will increase twofold. If both inductance and reactance are doubled, the reactance increases four-fold. On the other hand if the inductance is halved and the frequency is doubled, there will be no change in the reactance.

The inductive reactance is independent of current just so long as the value of L is not altered by the presence of the current. Such is the case with all air core inductances. In some cases, iron core inductances which carry current are subject to changes of L with changes of the current values. As to the resistance of the coil (inductance), it has no effect upon the reactance. It controls other factors and aids in the limitation of the total current in the circuit but it has no bearing upon the reactance of the coil. Thus, if we have a coil rated at 100 henrys and a resistance of 5000 ohms and that coil is to be used upon a frequency of 100 cycles, the reactance

The resistance of 5000 ohms, represented the resistance of the wire used in the making of the coil is another quantity to be discussed shortly.

Power in Circuit Employing an Inductance Only.—We determined that a condenser in an A.C. circuit consumes no power, that is a theoretically perfect condenser. Let us see what happens when the circuit contains inductance only, a theoretically perfect inductance. Referring to figure 62C, that the product of E I when E is zero and I is maximum is 0. However, as E increases and I decreases, the instantaneous values of e x i represent power. But at the 90° point, the power is again zero and this is repeated at the 180° point, the 270° point and the 360° point. Between these specified points we have power in the circuit. Now, we stated that the inductance was free from resistance, hence, there is no power lost as heat developed in the resistance. Since the increase of current through the inductance represents power taken from the circuit and stored in the magnetic field, and the decrease of current through the inductance represents the collapse of the magnetic field and restoration of the power to the supply circuit, the power loops shown in figure 62C, indicate that the amount taken from the circuit is again restored to the circuit and there is no power loss in the inductance. The phase angle θ between the voltage E and the current I is 90° and since the power

$P = E \times I \times \cos \theta$
$= 0$ power in watts and the power factor $= 0$

THE STUDIO SLEUTH.

Army to Produce Films; Officers Sent to Studios

San Antonio, Tex.—The United States Army is going into the motion picture game. Even talkers will be made. Of course, they will not be for exhibition purposes, but will be used in the instruction of reserve officers.

Lieut. Col. W. E. Prosser of the eighth corps area signal corps here outlined the plan. An agreement has been reached with the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences and the Association of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, whereby two signal corps officers will be sent to Hollywood Oct. 15, where they will take a nine months' course of instruction in the production of talking motion pictures.

Later, four more officers will take the same course. After completion these officers will act as instructors for the signal corps. It is planned to establish a complete army studio with all equipment necessary for making talking pictures.

While in Hollywood, the army officers will be instructed in studio equipment, film laboratory methods, production and technique of production.

Book Universal Solid In Pacific Northwest

Seattle—Solid booking of the complete Universal product for the coming season in the Pacific Northwest territory was announced here this week. Under contracts just closed, all Universal feature productions will be shown by Radio-Keith-Orpreum theatres in this city, Portland, Tacoma and Spokane. Short subjects, newsreel, etc., will be used in John Hamrick's Music Box and Blue Mouse theatres here, in Tacoma and Portland. It will be the first time that Universal has had solid first-run outlets in this territory since it ceased operating its own first-run downtown theatres in Seattle and Portland several seasons ago.

Pacy Reopens House

Baltimore—The McHenry, South Baltimore residential house operated by Walter Pacy, was reopened recently, after having been enlarged from a design by Oliver B. Wright, original designer of the playhouse. The part of the house with the stage was moved out on property purchased, increasing the seating capacity by 350 seats and making the house measurements 65 by 154 feet. Acoustic Celotex has been used as a wall covering, the screen measures 19x26 feet, and two new exits have been built on the sides. The Italian Rennaisance motif has been followed out in the design.

Back to Films

Cleveland—The Moreland, Shaker Heights, which has been offering stock for the past four weeks under the management of George Fox, is scheduled to open the end of this week with pictures. The house is owned by Paul Gusdanovic and George Palda.

High and Low On Music Row

ROBBINS MUSIC CORP. has started to work on several songs from the M-G-M production, "Love in the Rough," which were written by Dorothy Fields and Jimmy McHugh and mark these writers' initial efforts for the screen. The songs are "Go Home and Tell Your Mother," "I'm Doin' That Thing," "I'm Learnin' a Lot from You" and "One More Waltz." According to Martin Broones, head of the M-G-M Coast music department, "Go Home and Tell Your Mother" is one of the best musical comedy songs of the past decade.

With music business as a whole gradually coming back from one of the worst slumps in music history, DeSylva, Brown & Henderson are looking forward to a busy season due to the publication of a new fall catalogue consisting of the entire score from "Just Imagine," forthcoming Fox production, written by DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, and two pop songs, "Don't Tell Her," by D. B. & H., and "Still I Love Her," a modern ballad written by Clarence Gaskill.

Opinions on Pictures

(Columbia)

Thrilling

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

ADVENTUROUS souls invaded the African jungles with sound cameras and merged with a film document of epic proportions. Many pictures of wild life in the Dark Continuent have been filmed, but this is the first time that the roars of wild beasts have been captured as they made their kills of man and beast, and the result is an attraction that will create much word-of-mouth advertising and click at the box-office.

When the lion leaps upon and slays a native boy the latter's shriek is the most despairing cry imaginable; and one hears the death agonies of a warthog as a lioness sinks its teeth into its neck. Other sound effects include the chants of natives and their tribal music.

Paul L. Hoefler, explorer, who headed the Colorado-African Expedition, is deserving of unlimited applause for producing "Africa Speaks." It was apparent that he and his aids faced great dangers at times, for lions were seen circling the motor truck in which they penetrated the wild country, and the authenticity of the settings was enhanced by a second cameraman shooting Hoefler grinding away as wild animals sped past the scene.

There is such a quick succession of thrills that the picture is a break-taking one. While one is apt to view with suspicion the coincidence that the camera should have been focused on the spot of the slaying of the native, the fact remains that it caught the fugitive and lion with but a few feet separating them and then the boy struggling on the ground with the beast. The episode was a short one, but the eye could detect no trick stuff.

One of the most unique sights ever beheld on the screen was the scene showing millions of locusts flying through the air and literally darkening the skies. Later the sections which they traversed are shown, bare of every vestige of vegetation.

Another unusual feature depicts the flight of large herds of gazelles which leap high in the air and at times clear forty feet in their spurts. A portion of this sequence is shown in slow motion. Walter Futter's synchronizing job is highly commendable.

Close-ups of pygmy tribes, of duck-billed women whose lips have been enlarged by means of discs so that they would be unattractive to marauding savages, of natives tracking down and killing a lion with spears and of weird native dances add to the thrills.

The production should make the grade in any type of house, but exhibitors should capitalize the fact that the public can hear the sounds of the jungle in addition to getting a visual kick.

Any type of comedy will fit in here.

Produced by Paul L. Hoefler and Walter Futter for the Colorado-African Expedition, Inc. Distributed by Columbia. Length, 7,054 feet. Running time, 74 minutes. Release date, Sept. 15.

Extravagance

(Tiffany)

For Women

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

DESIGNED for women, "Extravagance," Tiffany's latest, which never gets above ordinary program standard, is the sort of picture to cause the feminine heart to hop about in a most alarming manner. It's not hard to believe that thousands of dollars were invested in the exquisite gowns so ably worn by June Collyer. Unfortunately, the story and direction do not match the clothes.

Except for the matinee audience, the picture cannot have a wide appeal. The story is the old one of the innocent young wife who longs for beautiful things and doesn't realize the high price she is paying to obtain them.

June Collyer is the wife of Lloyd Hughes, a fairly prosperous young man trying to get a good start in the business world, and she is an expensive although alluring young wife.

Her friendship with Gwen Lee, the wandering wife of Owen Moore, results in her meeting Robert Agnew, a handsome and designing young bachelor. Agnew is most anxious to assist with gratifying her desire for new clothes, but eventually Hughes discovers the affair and files suit for divorce.

Matters are brought to a sudden climax and there is, of course, a reconciliation. Capable acting is done by the entire cast, but the story lacks the sustained interest necessary. Cutting will undoubtedly improve it.

The type of story and the really gorgeous clothes worn by attractive girls supply a certain glamour.

News reels and comedies will be needed with this.

Produced and distributed by Tiffany. Directed by Phil Rosen. Story by M. B. Deering. Adaptation and dialogue by Adele Buffington, Frances Hyland and Phil Rosen. Photographed by Max Dupont. Edited by Charles Harris.

Der Tiger Von Berlin

(Ufa-German Dialogue)

Good Underworld Program

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

A WELL directed German mystery story, characterized by good acting. Although it slows up somewhat, due to a succession of long talking sequences, which lack action, it holds the interest throughout, and the real tiger is not revealed until the final scene. The mystery element is well handled, with suspicion cast upon several of the characters. This is not done in the accepted American manner of seeking to befuddle spectators, but through logical development, which keeps the audience guessing.

The director deserves major credit for this result, for he has told his tale so well that any one can understand the story, regardless of whether he is familiar with German. The leading role is played by Charlotte Susa, a comely and capable blonde. Opposite her is Harry Frank, who is a good looking hero of the he-man type. The balance of the cast is good, the work of Trude Berliner as the dancer standing out. The tango is a well done sequence.

The story is of the Tiger, dread murder and robbery specialist of Berlin. In each case the evidence is the same: the victim shot through the middle of the forehead and stripped of all money. The only clue to the latest murder is the fact that the loot consisted entirely of 100 mark notes. And so, when a well dressed stranger appears in a notorious cafe and begins spending 100-mark notes, suspicion is aroused, and a juggler in the assemblage squeals to police. When an inspector arrives, the well-dressed man at the bar, Harry Frank, arouses the crowd's mirth by some sarcastic remarks. This gesture wins recognition from a beautiful young woman, and he joins her in her booth. Adjoining is a party consisting of an adventurer and a bejeweled woman. Suddenly there is a shot and the latter is found dead, stripped of her jewels, when the lights again go on. Police unsuccessfully seek the murderer.

Later Frank breaks into a fashionable house. He is followed by the girl of the cafe. He makes love to her and, in embracing her, sees the necklace worn by the woman murder victim. He then arrests her as the murderer, disclosing his identity as a detective, after successfully defending himself from her bullets.

This needs comedy relief.

The Silver Horde

(RKO—Radio)

Synthetic

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

PLENTY of exploitation values in this filming of Rex Beach's novel—a great cast in the sort of outdoor action drama they seem to go for these days. Nevertheless, your audiences will feel dissatisfaction without being conscious of exactly why.

Several cogs slipped in attempting to catch the spirit of the Beach tale. To begin with, the results fail to justify the expense Radio entailed in sending a production unit to Alaska. There is little in the finished picture that has not been seen before in newsreels and travelogues. To top it, whatever punch the salmon fishing episodes have is lost by sinking the spectacle in the middle of the feature. From that point things dribble off to a weak finish.

The story is rather incoherent in its transcription. Just what all the fighting is for lacks clarity. From the looks of it, there were plenty of fish for both camps. Rivalry might be expected, but not the deep hatred expressed. This is, of course, from the layman's viewpoint.

The love interest, therefore, takes on false importance, and what should be supplementary becomes paramount. Two mushers drive their dog team into an unfriendly Alaskan camp. They are offered shelter by Cherry Malotte, who may be remembered as a former Beach character—the dance hall girl in "The Spoilers." In this instance the role is splendidly conceived by Evelyn Brent.

Serving Cherry, as sort of a watch dog, is Louis Wolheim. He bears a murderous hatred for the owner of the fishery in the village. (The basis for his grudge is another point which could be better emphasized.)

In the two strangers (Joel McCrea and Raymond Hatton) Cherry sees the means of founding a rival fishery for Wolheim. Her interest in rehabilitating McCrea is another factor in the plan. She dispatches the trio to Seattle to finance the needed machinery.

Seattle is McCrea's home town, and there lives the girl (Jean Arthur) for whom he originally went fortune-seeking in Alaska. Her father favors the courtship of Gavin Gordon, owner of the fishery with which McCrea will compete. The financing scheme is blocked by them. Whereupon Cherry arranges to sell her copper mine and effects with her bankers an apparent loan. The machinery is purchased, set up, and the salmon run begins.

During the run Jean Arthur, aboard her father's yacht, comes to see McCrea make good. She meets Cherry and a dramatic scene between the women ensues. McCrea learns of Cherry's reputation and renounces her friendship, only to learn at last that he loves her despite what she may have been.

McCrea is a forthright hero throughout.

Opinions on Pictures

"The Silver Horde" marks his first major assignment and he acquits himself with honors. Evelyn Brent is magnificent in her dramatic climax with Jean Arthur, and there is an outstanding bit by Blanche Sweet. With the exception of Gavin Gordon, the rest of the cast perform little more than adequately.

"The Silver Horde" cannot help but be compared unfavorably with other pictures of its type.

The Rap

(M-G-M)

One Long Howl

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

LAUREL and Hardy's first feature-length release and a comedy wow in every foot. When the comedians signed their new contract with Hal Roach last season it was decided that their releases would not be held to any predetermined footage. This one started as a short and laughed its way into the feature length class.

"The Rap," in several respects, is a travesty on "The Big House." The respective plots of the two are somewhat paralleled and both include a prison riot. This riot, by the way, need not take a back seat for any production.

The opening sequence is a gem. We find Laurel and Hardy in front of a malt and hops store window. Hardy is figuring on the back of an envelope the cost of ingredients—so many pounds of malt, sugar, etc. "And a cake of yeast," says Laurel.

After painful addition, Hardy proudly announces the result. "For $9.48," he says, "we can make fifteen gallons."

"But we can't drink fifteen gallons," Stan protests.

"What we can't drink we can sell," says the Babe. They nod agreement. Fadeout and in. A long shot of penitentiary walls with Laurel and Hardy in handcuffs being led through the gates.

From this point on they are continually in hot water. Stan has a "buzzing tooth," whenever he speaks, it causes him to give somebody a "raspberry." His disability gets him in trouble first with the warden, then with the prison tough guy. The gag is dropped midway in the picture with a hilarious dentist sequence.

Stan and Babe become the tools of the jail breakers and their innocent complicity leads to solitary confinement. The riot breaks in the dining hall during their first meal after a month of bread and water. Rushing through the yard to safety from the guns of both sides, Laurel and Hardy discover an open gate. As they are debating whether to make a break for freedom, they hear the screams of the warden's daughter. The rioting convicts have set fire to the warden's quarters and the girl is trapped in the flames.

Like real heroes they dash back to save her. Getting out the prison fire apparatus, they scale the wall and just as they are about to effect her rescue they happen to think that they haven't firemen's hats. Obviously they can't save a life without proper headgear.

Our heroes win a pardon for their bravery but you will regret to see them leave prison, for it means the end of one of the year's funniest pictures.

As in their shorts, Laurel and Hardy are the whole show. They have never been more hilarious. And don't let anyone tell you that their particular brand of humor cannot be sustained for seven reels. "The Rap" proves differently.

Dramatic or musical shorts only. Even cartoon questionable.

Produced by Hal Roach. Distributed by M-G-M. Directed by James Parrott. H. M. Walker, story editor. Photographed by Jack Stevens. Length, not set—probably around seven reels. Release date, not set.

East Is West

(Universal)

Pretty Good

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

AND here it is again—that familiar play of race clash and romance. This time Universal has taken Lupe Velez and cast her as Ming Toy. She does a capable job of it, too, her Mexican features fitting the Oriental role well.

Lew Ayres is young Billy Benson and comes across with as good a performance as he has offered in any of his roles since "All Quiet on the Western Front." Edward G. Robinson is seen as Charlie Yong. He makes a good job of the character role, at times overplaying the part but in such a manner that most audiences will eat it up.

It is a festival of light and airy romance, remarkably well filmed. The film drags at the start for a ways with considerable Oriental scenery and much Chinese talk.

The picture has been made nearly word for word from the play, but with the deft handling of Monta Bell moves along smoothly and pleasantly even with its threadbare plot.

Robinson manages to keep the interest alive whenever he appears with his conceited and overbearing manner. His string of chop suey houses furnish him with plenty of opportunity for comedy cracks.

The ending smashes through nicely with the climax where Ming Toy is found to be American after all and goes into the arms of her determined and boyish lover. Good cutting distinguishes the film.

It will hold up on split week bookings and should get across strong in the smaller cities.

Back it with a lively comedy.

Lots of Laughs

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

WHEELER and Woolsey break out in another laugh riot that is better than their first co-starring success, "The Cuckoos."

Where a good laugh comedy is a draw and where Wheeler and Woolsey are favorites this talker will do plenty of business. Good for a week in the better houses and sure-fire for the split week and subsequent bookings.

As two wayward soldier lads who take the war anything but serious, Bert Wheeler and Bob Woolsey give a good description of what France wasn't like in wartime. A.W.O.L. in Paris, Bob and Bert go through a series of comedy situations that have nothing to do with the story, but are very funny. Always harrassed by the M. P.'s, they have many narrow escapes from capture and imprisonment as deserters.

The story deals with the colonel, George MacFarlane, trying to capture Wheeler and Woolsey, get orders through to the general, and keep appointments with a French mademoiselle, Leni Stengel.

His troubles start when Dorothy Lee falls for Wheeler and steals the general's orders from Hugh Trevor, whom the colonel has dispatched to carry them to the front. Dorothy gives them to Wheeler who, with Woolsey, starts for the front line. Cut off by a heavy gunfire barrage, the boys go over the top, headed for the headquarters of the general.

The scene ends there with the lads facing death at the call of duty. The next scene shows them brought under heavy guard to the colonel. As he is about to court-martial them for stealing the orders and desertion they disclose to him the contents of the messages, which were not for the general, but love notes sent by Miss Stengel to the colonel. When the colonel hears of this he treats the boys royally and consents to Wheeler marrying Dorothy Lee. Trevor is forgiven for losing the "orders" and consent is given to his marrying Roberta Robinson, the colonel's other daughter.

The story thread, while very slight, holds interest all the way through. It gives the comedians an excuse for their many gags and they don't miss in putting them over.

In comedy roles besides Wheeler and Woolsey are Edna Mae Oliver and Leni Stengel, both of whom are very good. Dorothy Lee is as cute as ever, and her clever dances are fine. Hugh Trevor, Roberta Robinson, E. H. Calvert, Alan Roscoe, Eddie DeLange, and George MacFarlane are well cast.

Paul Sloane has directed most capably and keeps the talker moving at a fast tempo, so that it rides over the many rough spots in the story without ill effect.

The gags are newer than in former Wheeler and Woolsey pictures, and that is a big help to the production.

Cartoons and semi-serious shorts will fit here.

A Lady Surrenders

(Universal)

Fine Entertainment

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

UNIVERSAL announced early this season that the company intended to strike off on a new tack, making a high class of pictures aimed for the best theatres everywhere. If this one is a sample of what may be expected throughout the year, the company should be in for a banner season. Carl Laemmle, Jr., has demonstrated his ability to turn out good pictures, and he certainly can be proud of this one. It is one of the highest quality pictures ever turned out by the company and should prove a box-office hit, provided exhibitors get behind it.

The picture is designed purely for adult consumption. There is nothing in it for the kiddies, and the wise showman will govern his advertising appeal accordingly. It is a frank and diverting story of a mismarriage, the husband finding his wife not suited to him by inclination and temperament, and falling in love with the wife's girl friend.

Direction is capital throughout, the interest being well sustained, save for some drawn-out sequences about the middle of the picture. These can be trimmed without at all hurting the story's development. As it stands now, the picture is too long, running one hour and 42 minutes.

Rose Hobart and Genevieve Tobin turn in splendid performances as the wife and the other woman, respectively. Miss Hobart has the far more difficult part and certainly puts it over in splendid fashion. Miss Tobin is an attractive and capable trouper. Conrad Nagel is very good as the husband and the remainder of the well-balanced cast includes Basil Rathbone, Edgar Norton, Carmel Myers, Franklin Pangborn, Vivian Oakland and Grace Cunard.

Winthrop Beauvel (Conrad Nagel), well-to-do manufacturer, is married to Rose Hobart, a successful novelist bored with her husband. She is the author of a bitter article on marriage. Winthrop reads the article and writes the author (the article having been published under a nom de plume) and makes a date with her to discuss the article.

Isabel sends her friend, Genevieve Tobin. The two spend the evening together. Winthrop is forced to spend the night in a hotel because of a heavy rain and Isabel accuses him of unfaithfulness, packs her bags and starts for Europe with the avowed intention of seeking a divorce.

En route she meets Carl Vaudry, a continental philanderer, falls in love with him and upon her arrival in France sets about to obtain a divorce. On the day the divorce is to be granted Vaudry jilts her. She drops the case and returns to America.

In the meantime, Winthrop, thinking himself divorced, marries Mary. They return from their honeymoon the same day Isabel lands. A violent scene between the two women ensues and Mary finally dashes from the house and attempts suicide by throwing herself in front of an automobile. She is only slightly injured but the effect is softening on Isabel, who agrees to go at once to Reno and obtain a divorce, pronouncing the love of Winthrop and Mary too deep for her understanding.

A story with unusual twists, well developed and finely acted. Effort will be needed to get them in, but if given the help it deserves this should be good box-office fare, and it surely will please.

Comedy and musical shorts needed for balance.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Associate producer, E. M. Asher. Directed by John M. Stahl. From the story, "Sincerity," by John Erskine. Continuity by Gladys Lehman. Dialogue by Arthur Richman. Settings by Walter Kessler. Edited by Maurice Pivar. Sound by C. Roy Hunter. Photographed by Jack Rose. Footage, 8,485 feet. Running time, 1 hour and 42 minutes. The Santa Fe Trail

(Paramount)

Good Western

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THIS western will prove to be appetizing fare to audiences which like plenty of action and thrills. Kids, especially, will enjoy it.

It is better than the average wild-west talkers and good for regular runs and small town theatres. With Mitzi Green and Junior Durkin in the cast, it has kid appeal galore.

Directors Otto Brower and Edwin Knopf have turned out a talker the first reels of which are exceptional, but later developments of the story cause it to fall somewhat.

Richard Arlen, Junior Durkin and Eugene Pallette are moving a vast flock of sheep to the open range. Their herders quit and they are faced with the calamity of losing the flock, with no pasture land or water. When Arlen discovers that there is pasture at Spanish Acres, a grant of land belonging to Luis Alberni, he goes to the Rancho and tries to make a deal. Alberni does not like Arlen's idea of having Indians for sheepherders, as he believes they are the cause of his many losses.

Arlen, who has fallen for Alberni's beautiful daughter, Rosita Moreno, tries hard to get the father to take interest in the sheep and let the Indians take care of them. Alberni is almost convinced when a barn is set afire and he believes the Indians are responsible.

Arlen, hearing that Hooper Atchley holds a number of mortgages on Spanish Acres, investigates and finds that Atchley is the "Indian" menace; his gang having set fire to the barn.

Aware of Arlen's discovery, Atchley kills Chief Sutanek and blames Arlen. However, Junior Durkin and Mitzi Green see the murder and tell the Indians, who believe the children. Thus Arlen is saved, Spanish Acres is restored, the Indians get jobs as sheepherders and Arlen gets Rosita.

The last part of the story is extremely trite and illogical, but the talker moves at such a fast pace that this will be overlooked. Had the story been developed in better fashion, it would have been an exceptionally fine picture.

Arlen, as Stan Hollister, is much better than in other westerns he has played in, and gives a fine performance. Miss Moreno is very attractive, and her dance at the fiesta is beautifully done. Junior Durkin and Mitzi Green almost steal the picture, and with Eugene Pallette provide plenty of good comedy.

Musical shorts and cartoons would be effective here.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Otto Brower and Edwin Knopf. Based on "Spanish Acres" by Hal G. Evarts. Screen play by Sam Mintz. Dialogue by Edward E. Paramore, Jr. Photographed by David Abel. Edited by Verna Willis. Length, 5,839 feet. Release date, Sept. 27.

Captain Thunder

(Warners)

Pretty Sad

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

CAPTAIN THUNDER," which was formerly and just as attractively captioned "The Gay Caballero," succeeds in being only a program picture and not too good a one at that. Given an unusually good cast and what might have been a brightly romantic story, the picture fails to hold the interest.

This fault may be due to the lack of continuity in the film and again it may be due to the fact that the whole affair is handled with too slow and heavy a hand.

The story rambles on about Capt. Thunder, a dashing and gay gentleman whose promises are made and kept. We were assured of that by a very short scene in which Natalie Moorhead, doing her bit to the best of her ability, infers that our hero's promises are so much wind. A stormy outburst of injured pride follows.

It is one of the gay gentleman's promises that causes him to break up the wedding of Fay Wray and Don Alvardo, so that the scheming Robert Elliott may take her as his own bride. Thinking nothing of promises, the hero and villain walk off the set . . . a shot . . . the hero walks back alone to inform all that Miss Wray makes a charming widow.

Victor Varconi pleases as Capt. Thunder, while Fay Wray, as always, adds charm and a poised performance as the heroine.

Charles Judels and Bert Roach supply what little comedy is possible, Judels as the commandante, sputtering and fuming through a fair act of vaudevilie.

Good support is lent by the remainder of the cast. Publicized from an angle of a gay caballero and lover of women, this may draw fairly well.

Should be combined with particularly good shorts of any type, preferably comedies.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Based on a story by Pierre Couderc and Hal Devitt. Directed by Alan Crosland. Screen play by Gordon Rigby. Dialogue by Wm. K. Wells. Photography by James Van Trees.

Heads Up

(Paramount)

Absurd

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

WHEN I went to school "Heads Up" meant "Watch Out." Guess it still does.

This is just another of those things that are giving the go-by to musicals on the screen. And by the same organization, too, which made "The Love Parade," "Monte Carlo" and "Paramount on Parade" in justification of the filmusical.

The things that "Heads Up" missed are nearly too numerous for accounting. It opens with some fine marching formations by the U. S. Coast Guards. Promptly the military is forgotten except as an excuse for Charles Rogers to wear a naval uniform with jaunty white yachting cap.

The erstwhile Buddy meets a girl and proposes before the evening is over. Mama, however, has other plans. She wants her daughter to marry the villain—a deep-dyed bootlegger engaged in using her yacht to run booze. Since when was this villainy?

But the Department of Justice is on the job. The sleuth tips off the coast guard commander—he didn't know, you know—that somebody's rum running.

Young Ensign Rogers is detailed to help catch the band. With the secret service agent, he hides in a life boat on the yacht of his sweetheart's mother—there's another sister, too, if that makes any difference, who is engaged to another boy in the navy, though where he is at the moment is hard to remember.

What ho for a bottle of rum. Dirty work afoot at sea. The yacht backs up to an enormous sailing vessel. The booze is exchanged, with all the boisterousness of bootleggers. And mother slumbers on. So do daughters—both daughters. So do all their friends, including the boy to whom the second daughter is engaged. That's where he was sleeping.

But your young ensign is awake. He waits until all the booze is aboard and then, singlehanded, he holds up the captain and crew. Hurrah for the Coast Guard!

Our heroine is still sleeping all this time. She awakens at the sound of a whispered conversation in the passageway. She hears an argument between the hero and villain. Stepping forth, she tells the hero what she thinks of him for waking her up. It breaks him up so he breaks up the yacht on the biggest rock you ever saw.

We next glimpse our friends marooned on an island. And, when the girl, still awake, forgives the boy, we fade out on them in close embrace as a radio plays the theme song. The Marines aren't even given an opportunity to land and have the situation well in hand.

If you must know the worst, Charles Rogers sings a couple of songs, one a solo on a studio-lit wharf with waves and everything. Helen Kane boops a bit. Victor Moore, as a comedy cook, is responsible for a couple of genuinely funny moments.

Accustomed as we are to granting liberties to our musical comedies, this is going too far. It's license.

All the strength in shorts you can muster. But no musicals.

Her Wedding Night

(Paramount)

A Comedy Riot

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

HER WEDDING NIGHT," the latest effort of the fiery Miss Bow, is going to cause pleasant noises in the box-office. Paramount has put Charlie Ruggles, Skeets Gallagher and Ralph Forbes into the same cast and it wouldn't matter whether anyone else were in it or not.

"Her Wedding Night" is simply ordinary French farce about a composer who is tired of being chased by women. He persuades his friend to impersonate him and the latter, who is engaged to a pretty Gloria, inadvertently marries Clara Bow in the name of the composer.

Ralph Forbes is the composer, Gallagher the friend and Charles Ruggles assists every time the action slows up for a moment. Miss Bow is, of course, Norma, the wife, whom Forbes has thrust upon him and immediately desires to keep.

The several pretty girls who complete the cast and furnish foils for the comedy are Natalie Kingston, Rosita Moreno and Geneva Mitchell.

Lines are slightly risque, as are situations; the plot is old but fast moving. Although far from being one of the best pictures of the year, "Her Wedding Night" will pay well at the box-office.

Those weary of prison pictures, war epics and drawing room drama should welcome its trivial, but nevertheless laugh provoking, gaieties with open arms.

The antics of the three men, Ruggles having a sleep complex, Gallagher harassed and attempting to keep his fiance from discovering his other intrigues, Forbes, solemn and all at sea regarding his strange marriage, are outstanding.

Ruggles, in particular, makes the house shake with laughter at his work. This will perhaps prove to be his outstanding success in the motion picture field. His every appearance is a signal for laughs.

His scene, when he unsuspectingly gets into bed with Clara is the best of its kind ever produced, judging from the storm of applause which greeted the preview showing.

The action moves rapidly from start to finish, many of the more dangerous gags being snapped across in such a fast fashion that it is doubtful if any censors will ever catch up with them. If they start trimming this one they'll be busy from the beginning.

The picture should draw well coupled with the B.O. appeal of Clara and the word-of-mouth boosts it will get from the comedy staged by the men.

The star, herself, is somewhat blanketed by the others. She merely serves as "the reason" for all the excitement, but this does well enough. She does little, if any, "It-ing" and for the most part wears plenty of clothes. Frank Tuttle's direction is meritorious and his handling of the comedy situations is outstanding, as he gets the most out of everything.

You'll need a dramatic short to balance.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Frank Tuttle from a play by Avery Hopwood. Screen play by Henry Myers. Photographed by Harry Fischbeck. Associate produced, Lloyd Sheldon. Edited by Doris Drought. Length, not set. Release date, Oct. 25.

Short Subjects

The Blimp Mystery

(Tiffany)

Sensationally Clever

IF THE first release in the series of "Chimp" comedies on Tiffany's new short subject schedule can be accepted as a criterion, every theatre in the land should book the group. It reaches the height of perfection in the field of comedy and novelty and technically this one is a gem, with timing of human voices to actions of the chimps so masterfully done that an added touch of naturalness is given the near-human cavortings of the players. The dialogue is unusually fine and sound recording highly commendable.

All in all, this release stacks up far above 90 per cent. of short releases on the market at present and should not be allowed to slip by without a play. Running time, about 21 minutes.

Laughs galore, so use to advantage on a dramatic bill in need of lightening.

Over the Air

(Hodge Podge—Educational)

Dull

MAYBE this suffers greatly in comparison with other Hodge Podge subjects, but at any rate it fails to click. There is a radio broadcast idea carried throughout and it flops. Some of the travel shots are good, but they are hurt by the hick announcer stuff.

Needs strong help to get by.

Wilkins Murder Mystery

Has Possibilities

THIS is a departure in shorts and while the series has fine exploitation possibilities, this initial picture of the series could have been done much more effectively. For instance, a study of the various methods used to solve the murder, rather than a narration of the steps taken by William Burns and his men, would have carried more dramatic punch. The choice of the vehicle is not so hot, as the murder was a comparatively commonplace one. However, the subject has novelty and Burns' name is copy anywhere. The short should go over okeh. Running time, 18 minutes.

Good for comedy or musical bill.

(Pathe)

Duli

THIS Walt Disney cartoon packs all the stuff you've seen time after time with fishes instead of delirium tremens animals, dancing, talking, singing and cavorting about. Didn't get a chuckle out of a New York audience. The public is fed up on this type of stuff. Running time, 6 minutes.

Use it on a children's bill.

Measuring Time

(Ufa—Silent)

Good Short

A DIVERTING history of the ways of measuring time from the early days of sun dials to the present intricate timepieces. This traces the evolution through the hour glass period to the introduction of the clock, and shows the various steps in the clock's development. It's well handled and should prove of interest to any audience. Running time, 7 minutes.

For any bill.

Martinelli

(Vitaphone Variety)

Worthwhile

OPERA lovers—and they are legion—will find keen delight in Martinelli's rendition of this picturesque episode from Verdi's opera. He gives a commendable performance and his voice registers unusually clear. The female lead works hard, but the mechanics did not treat her as kindly as they did the tenor. Running time, 7 minutes.

This one should play with a sophisticated drama.

The Gem of Agra

Fine

THIS is No. 13 of the Vagabond Adventure Series, and it travels throughout India, showing the Taj Mahal and the ruins of another Taj at Agra. Interiors are shown of the former, with close-ups of the tombs of Emperor Jahan, who built both, and his wife. There are brief views of the construction of another temple, including intimate shots of the artisans at work. The synchronized lecture by the director, Tom Terris, is illuminating and interesting. Running time, 10 minutes.

Fine anywhere.

(RKO Radio)

Good

THERE are a lot of laughs in this two-reeler starring Karl Dane and George K. Arthur and it should go over big with those who relish slapstick. There is no pretense of plausibility to the story, but its speedy tempo and rapid succession of comedy situations give this preferred rating in the short subject line. Dane and Arthur are seen as two radio installers who insist upon putting in an instrument on the wedding night of a young couple. Their efforts annoy a neighbor as much as the honeymooners, but just when they have finished their work and got the thing to working the neighbor dashes in and smashes it with an axe. Then he discovers that the radio was meant for him. The radio men leave; the newly-weds are alone at last. But at that moment the alarm clock rings and the groom has to go to work, the night being a total loss all around. Running time, 20 minutes.

Great for comedy relief.

Fried Chicken

(Educational-Terrytoon)

Fair Cartoon

THERE are a few laughs in this comedy subject, which boasts some novel effects. Our hero sets out to make a name for himself in the world and winds up by replenishing the stock on the old southern homestead. It compares favorably with the many cartoon subjects on the market and will please pretty generally. Running time, 8 minutes.

Where cartoon subject fits.

For Art's Sake

Plenty of Laughs

SNAPPY chatter occupies the spotlight in this sketch, with Helen Broderick ideally cast for the part. It concerns a hard-boiled, cynical manicurist and her opinion of the opposite sex. Has sufficient laughs to get by with most audiences. Running time, 11 minutes.

Nice for a bill featuring a dramatic subject.

Society Goes Spaghetti

(RKO Radio)

Rough-house

"SOCIETY GOES NUTTY" would be a better title for this Nick and Tony Short. Although a major portion of the story is laid inside a mansion, this is the toughest example of slapstick we've ever seen. However, it packs a large number of laughs and therefore justifies its roughness. The two Italian leads are suspected of kidnaping a rich man's daughter and when they return her to her home the overjoyed mother invites them to dinner and outfits them with her husband's clothes. Tony accidentally drops a quantity of pistol caps into the spaghetti and they explode in the mouths of the diners. Thereupon Tony and Nick wreck the place. They sure packed a lot of action in this one. Directed by Mark Sandrich. Running time, 20 minutes.

Excellent balance for a dud feature.

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1,063)

Poor

THIS is labeled "a satire on quack doctors," but it's more of a still-born idea of humor. Hugh Cameron is cast as the lead and that was a sad mistake, for his antics are far from funny. And the brain that concocted this vehicle requires disciplining. Running time, 9 minutes.

Spot it into a strong program.

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1,043)

Weak

THE Yacht Club Boys, a quartette, are furnished with a slight dash of story on which to hang their singing. It's nicely mounted, but we've heard lots of better quartettes and songs Running time, 9 minutes.

Use with a heavy feature.

Short Subjects

The Fire Worshippers

(Tiffany)

Interesting

CREATORE and his band open this short with a selection from the opera, "Il Guarany," and a fade-out carries the audience into the action of the piece while the orchestration continues. The locale is the Amazon Valley, with a romance between an Indian prince and princess furnishing the story. Girls in costumes eat up most of the footage with tribal dances and become boresome, but the lovers go into a final clinch, the reason for it all being somewhat vague. It is excellently recorded and novel, and will appeal generally. Running time, 10 minutes.

Use on a program that needs musical balance

(Pathe)

Interesting

INSIDE stuff on the new sport of gliding, which, a subtitle in this Grantland Rice Sportlight tells us, is making the nation air-minded. First are shown a group of Boy Scouts taking lessons at the Alexander Airport, Colorado Springs, Colo., and this is followed by Ruth Elder Camp giving an extended and enthusiastic lecture on the joys of gliding and demonstrating how it's done. Should please generally. Running time, 10 minutes.

Okay for any type of bill.

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1,054)

Goofy

H. I. PHILLIPS, a New York newspaper columnist, is credited with the story behind this and we advise him to stick to his old job. It relates the woes of an amateur radio announcer who develops a severe case of nervous derangement as the time nears for him to face the microphone. It's a half-baked idea and badly done at that all the way through. Now we know what's the matter with radio. Running time, 9 minutes.

Give it good support.

Don't Bite Your Dentist

(Mack Sennett-Educational)

Good Comedy

THIS has quite a few laughs and a number of good gags. Even though it falls below the average of the other comedies in the popular series released by Educational, it is good comedy with Andy Clyde, Daphne Pollard, Patsy O'Leary and Lincoln Stedman doing their stuff in a well-balanced cast. Some good laughs are introduced by a parrot who talks while the dentist is at work, and, of course, he believes the woman patient is doing the discoursing. You can depend upon it for laughs. Running time, 22 minutes.

Will fit on any bill.

(Pathe)

Infantile

THIS issue travels from Japan to Palestine and to the Bronx, and what an anti-climax that is! By means of the Pathechrome process we see Japs making dolls and a subtitle informs us that the toys are "what every little mother of Japan wants for Christmas," which gives us a new slant on the religion of that land. Next come some shots of fishermen at work on the Sea of Galilee, the lack of action being bolstered (?) by some terrible wisecracks. Then, under the heading "Rural Night Life," we are taken to the Hollywood Gardens, a cabaret, and shown how New York's elevator operators and their gum-chewing partners enjoy themselves dancing on postage stamps. Rudy Vallee is snapped while hoofing with a partner and smiling in a silly manner, and Paul Whiteman shouts this juicy bit of humor into the microphone: "Oh, what a clam bake! Wow, what a joint!" Yes, there must be hicks in the big city. Running time, 9 minutes.

Tag it onto a good feature.

Love Your Neighbor

Good Comedy

CHARLOTTE GREENWOOD is always good for laughs, and this has a fairly good story which gives her a chance to get over a number of good gags. She joins one of the good-deed-a-day clubs and gets into plenty of jams with one of the members, Dot Farley. It seems that Charlotte's hubby is just closing a big deal with Dot's husband, so there is plenty doing. Miss Greenwood should build up a big following in short comedies. Running time, 22 minutes.

For any kind of bill.

(Pathe)

Fair

A "BIG LENS HUNT" in the Canadian woods starts off this issue with a bang, the speed boat in which the camera is stationed pursuing a huge moose swimming frantically away from his pursuer. It's new and exciting. This sequence is followed by telescopic shots of other wild animals, including beaver, otter, badgers, fox cubs and wild duck. In the second unit Gladys Mulhall, who has a swell recording voice, gives a lecture on the proper use of cosmetics, demonstrating on a model. However, it's done in Coloratura, which obscured the face of the patient, bleaching almost to a white at the exact moment that the rouge was applied. The ladies will fall for this feature. This issue is rounded out by exterior and interior views of the "Gingerbread Castle" in New Jersey, which the children will enjoy, even if it's been shot before. Running time, 9 minutes.

Will help to diversify a bill.

Gates of Happiness

Lacks Pep

A MINIATURE musical revue whose only redeeming feature is the setting, representing a stairway leading to the "Gateway of Happyland." Included in the cast are Arthur Pat West as master of ceremonies, the Murray Sisters, the Norman Spencer Singers and a group of chorus girls. The dancing and singing were routine and didn't arouse much enthusiasm. Color would have helped here. Running time, 8 minutes.

Will get by where music is required.

"Kismet" Follows

Premiere of First National's "Kismet," Otis Skinner opus, is set for New York's Hollywood Theatre upon completion of the current "Outward Bound" run.

Libel to Print Players' Prattle, Writer Declares

Chicago — "Probably movie actors will never realize how often the lowly reporter saves their carefully made-up faces," writes Sterling North, dean of the Chicago newspapers' train-meeting crew, in an article appearing in the Midweek Magazine.

North, who has interviewed practically every picture light to pass through the city during the past ten years, was giving his impressions of these contacts with the celebrated ones.

"Direct quotes (of movie stars) are out of the question," he says. "Often, realistic reporting would sound like libel."

It is a duty of the reporter, North contends, to write of movie folk not what he sees but what the public expects them to be and, in consequence, wants to hear of them. The reporter has his favorites—stars who are always good copy, who furnish their own legitimate news when they arrive in town and do not expect that their mere names and presence constitute a newspaper story. Oddly, North indicates that the women stars most often fail in this respect. The exception he notes are Gloria Swanson, Anita Stewart and Mae Murray. The rest, apparently, only constitute a major worry in the interviewer's life.

"A railway passenger agent," North writes, "who has been routing celebrities for the last fifty years, recently said that really important people never are temperamental, that they are easy to manage and easy to talk to. It's the two-by-four chorus girl type that causes the rumpus, said he. And nobody agrees with him any more violently than the man whose job it is to meet movie people at the station and translate a few bon mots, some Hollywood patter, and a flurried smattering of stage idioms into something to please the star's dear public.

"But, somehow," North continues, "the men are different."

Chicago—Warner's Capitol, advertising "Dawn Patrol," cries out:

"The arms of a Mademoiselle their only Heaven."

There's not a dame in the entire cast.

Publicity Hound

Chicago—Frank Young, one of the affable and decorative fixtures at the United Artists' exchange, is worthy of the family name he bears. Still looking like a college lad, but with more pep than most of them, Frank is, in reality, a family man with boy and girl responsibilities over twelve years old. They must, however, be burdens of pleasure, for they certainly haven't aged papa to any noticeable extent. This is the third time Frank has rated picture space in these columns in recent months, which gives him the space chiseling record of this department.

Chicagoans Fall For Serials and Mellers as Fad

Chicago—Numerous neighborhood houses here which draw a sophisticated or "smart" audience are booking a number of melodramas, westerns, serials and the like, with the result that independent product is getting its best play here in years. The bookings are taking the place of comedies and other short subject product and play in support of a regular feature.

The meller stuff is clicking in every spot where the trade approaches the highbrow. Audiences give the mellers a big hand; the cheaper and more ludicrous the picture, the better it is liked. The trend, in consequence, though no doubt little more than a fad, is beginning to be looked upon here as genuine competition for legitimate short subject product, which it is replacing.

Recognition of this trend in popular taste, though naturally in a more modified vein, is being given even by circuit bookings. Publix, Warner and Fox theatres here have booked independent product, largely serials and westerns. Originally, the bookings were specifically for kids' matinees and did not show at evening performances. Adults, however, "went" for the cheap product in such impressive numbers and with so much enthusiasm that it became a problem for a kid to get a seat at one of these matinees.

Even an occasional ancient silent is unreeled in some houses. The degree of absurdity attained by the picture appears to be the test of its success on these programs.

Mitzi Mimics

Chicago — Mitzi Green, Paramount prodigy, hit town during the week and gave veteran newspaper interviewers one of the infrequent treats of their rather dull careers. Her impromptu and entirely genuine program at the railway terminal included mimicings of everyone from the engineer of the train which brought her to town to the reporters themselves. She was, in consequence, heartily applauded, both in person and in print.

Mitzi, accompanied by her parents, was en route to Toronto for personal appearances. She returns to Chicago in one week to appear at the Chicago Theatre.

Gratis Parking As Summer Aid Revoked by B.-K.

Chicago—It now develops that the epidemic of offers of free parking for theatre patrons that prevailed here for the past few months was just a seasonal gag calculated to aid summer business. With the advent of cooler weather all offers are rapidly being withdrawn and theatre patrons are once more paying regular parking rates or hunting for curb space anywhere within a mile radius of the theatres.

Balaban & Katz, who started the free parking policy for patrons of both Loop and outlying houses, also was the first to call it off. Free parking in the neighborhoods went first; then came a retrenchment in the Loop policy. Patrons who enjoyed free parking at the North Loop Motoramp during the summer discover now that their B. & K. endorsement is good only for a fifteen-cent reduction on the regular parking rates, which ordinarily range from 50 cents to $1. There is also a probability that even this reduction will go by the boards in the near future.

Other houses that followed B. &. K.'s lead in providing parking facilities without charge this summer are also rapidly reinstating full rates where the parking space is in connection with the theatre and, where it is not, deals with garages are being called off.

Ruth Beats Greta; Jolson Slips Notch

Chicago—Local theatre men are wondering what, if any, significance may be attached to this:

The gross of the Garbo picture, "Romance," was approximately $15,000 under that of the Ruth Chatterton picture, "Anybody's Woman," playing successive weeks at the Chicago Theatre. The Chatterton picture established a new house record, according to Publix-B. & K.

Al Jolson's picture, "Big Boy," was booked for the Oriental Theatre, a weekly change house, for the first time a Jolson picture has played anything but a run house here.

Barber and Three Friends Trim Coco

Chicago—Antonio Coco and three companions left New York in Coco's car bound for Hollywood and a movie career.

"Let's get a shave," one of them suggested as they neared Chicago.

Drawing up in front of a barber shop Coco's three companions leaped from the car and rushed for the chairs. Coco was the last to be shaved. When he emerged there was neither sight nor sign of his companions. Nor of Coco's car, which was really what mattered, he told police here.

Chicago Goes in For Ritzy Runts With Atmosphere

Chicago—Additional plans for ritzy indoor golf courses about the Loop are being announced here daily. The entire twenty-third floor of the Straus Tower, Michigan and Jackson boulevards, including an outdoor roof garden, was recently remodeled to accommodate one of the shrunken courses. A second on Michigan Ave. frontage goes into the Congress Hotel Annex this week. The latter spot is street level and occupies space formerly taken by eight exclusive shops. Its interior decorations are being done by a West Coast expert, who is reproducing an outdoor atmosphere, even to a summer sky ceiling. The manager inspecting the work is reported to have contracted hay fever from a realistic prairie sidewall.

Big Deal on for Minnie

Another one in the south Loop section has been opened at 218 South Wabash Ave., occupying large street level space. The most elaborate of all may go into the same neighborhood if contracting parties come to an agreement on rental terms for the mammoth Auditorium Theatre on Congress St., former home of the Chicago Civic Opera Company. Negotiations for this site are under way, but no lease has been signed as yet.

In the theatre district, the major part of the second floor of the Ashland Block, Clark and Randolph, is being fitted out with a course scheduled to open soon.

Aldermen Still Buck Public on Sunday Shows

Chicago — While Master in Chancery George E. Gorman continues the hearing of evidence on Evanston's Sunday show question, aldermen of the North Shore suburb indicated that they did not favor Sunday theatre openings. In an expression vote, requested for the guidance of Evanston city attorneys who are scheduled to appear before Master Gorman this week, the city council voted ten to four against Sunday movies. The expression is without legal significance, however, as the present hearing before Master Gorman is on a petition for an injunction to prevent Evanston police from enforcing the Sunday theatre closing ordinance. The hearings on this petition will continue during the week.

Theatres Forcing the Issue

Evanston's Sunday problem originated following a special election at which two out of the suburb's seven wards returned a majority vote in favor of Sunday movies. The city council, however, refused to lift the old ban because a majority of the wards had voted against the proposal. Theatre interests are now forcing the issue, basing their action on the favorable popular vote.

Stiff Censorship Urged in U. K.

London—Colonial Films Committee, organized in March, 1929, to investigate ways and means of furthering British film interests in the colonies, has concluded its investigation. It urges:

Wide reaching measures for the stiffening of local censorship arrangements in the colonies and the establishment of a central censorship board in London.

A central organization to be set up in London under auspices of the Federation of British Industries, to act as a centre for the supply of British films.

A small government guarantee for the initial year of the operation of a supervising board for this organization.

Development of theatre fields in the colonies, particularly in tropical Africa, where there exist only 36 theatres for 36,000,000 people.

The insistence that British films gain a stronghold in colonial markets.

On the committee are Sir Wm. Brass, M.P., Simon Rowson and H. Bruce Woolfe, representing the industry, and E. Foxen-Cooper, government film advisor.

Property Owners Fight Winnipeg Suburban Plan

Winnipeg—Allied Amusements, Ltd., of which Charles Miles is president, has run into a jam in connection with the erection of a theatre on Academy Road because of the opposition of residents to the inclusion of a fourth lot on the side street, which is residential. Miles declared that if the site is restricted to a depth of three lots, only a $50,000 theatre can be built. With four lots, the theatre will represent an investment of $150,000. Property owners complained that there would be considerable parking of cars by patrons, but Miles has leased a vacant lot to take care of patrons' cars. Yet the neighbors continue to oppose the four-lot plan.

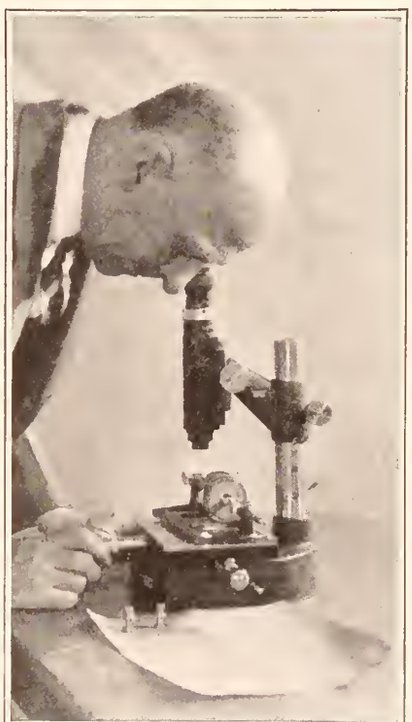
RKO Plans Improvements For Libson Theatres



Cincinnati—As part of an extensive remodeling and improvement program about to be launched by RKO in the houses recently acquired from the Libson chain, approximately $100,000 will be spent for new projection equipment, according to John L. McCurdy, division manager. Seating capacity of some of the larger houses here will be materially increased in addition to other improvements. Important alterations will also be made in houses at Dayton and Columbus, under McCurdy's management, the aggregate expenditure to reach around $600,000.

Portable Radio Movies in U. K.

London—England claims the lead in commercializing television in picture house, with Baird Television Co. claiming perfection of a portable device and screen to be rented to theatres beginning immediately. The new type of screen has a finer grain and programs will be regularly broadcast from the Baird station.

In addition, a home television set is ready for marketing, Baird tying up with theatres as sales distributors. The latter will plug the home televisors through lobby displays and demonstrations, it is planned.

Steel Fingers of Microscopic Precision

● Bell & Howell craftsman using a tool-maker microscope in the inspection of an automatic screw machine circular form tool. This tool is used in making the blanks for the take-up sprockets for Filmo 70-D Cameras. This measuring instrument serves to ascertain the structure of metals and flaws in tools and is used for measurements of gauges, gear teeth, angles, and contours. Measurements can be taken to .0001 of an inch.

STEEL fingers perforate miles of celluloid ribbon that will be sent to Hollywood to catch the voice and charm of a celebrated actress. In Hollywood, steel fingers move this ribbon past a sensitive camera lens, recording the movements of actors on "location". In a little town in Vermont, steel fingers move this ribbon past a projection lens, and scores of theater-goers thrill to the life-like action before them.

The success of this cycle of movie making rests, in great measure, upon the similarity of the steel fingers which perforated the film, those which moved it through the camera, those which moved it through a projection machine. A flaw in the first two sets of fingers would have rendered the last set of fingers clumsy and ineffectual. But there were no flaws, and the movie goes on the screen without a hitch.

Microscopic precision is the only phrase which adequately characterizes the design and manufacture of Bell & Howell cinemachinery, from Standard Perforators to Standard Studio Cameras, Printers and Splicers. For only microscopic precision could have guaranteed that the theater-goers in that small town in Vermont would thrill to the life-like shadows which moved across the screen.

Bloomington, Ind.—Fifty-six members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church have signed a petition to the city council urging that it close theatres and miniature golf courses on Sundays. Committee to Revamp Canadian Copyrights

Ottawa—An advisory committee on trade marks and copyrights has been appointed by C. H. Cahan, the new secretary of state in the Canadian government, to revise present statutes for the consideration of Parliament at its next session, probably in February. Justice McLean of the Exchequer Court, Ottawa, has been named chairman. It is hoped to revamp the Canadian laws so that they will be acceptable to all interests. Justice McLean presided at the hearing at Ottawa of the application of DeForest Phonofilms of Canada, Ltd., against Northern Electric and Famous Players for damages for alleged infringement of patents on talking picture equipment, but no decision has been rendered.

Another issue is that raised by the Performing Rights Society of Canada in attempting to impose a tax on all Canadian theatres and exhibitions for the playing of copyrighted music which the society claims to control by ownership of assignments.

Advertising!

(Suggested by "The Reason Why" from the Bridgeport Post, June 18, 1886)

TRY assembling several hundred theatre ads and then study them carefully. You will soon learn that theatre advertising is one of the most mysteriously funny things on earth.

Advertising, if we are to believe what we are told, was developed, first, last and all the time, to draw custom. If it has any other purpose in our modern existence, then we have failed to find it.

Therefore, having settled the purpose of advertising, let us next consider when it should be employed for best results.

Some showman plugs on, sadly neglecting this important factor until a couple of big pictures come along, then finding himself up to his neck in taking care of his house and patrons, he rushes off to the printer and decides to go in for advertising.

When business falls off a little, when he has plenty of time on his hands, when he is desperately trying to take in enough to pay for his rent and pictures, he stops his advertising.

Economy, he calls it. Can't afford expensive advertising.

Applesauce, we calls it. It's the only thing that will stimulate his business.

But, fortunately, they are not all like that. Occasionally a level-headed showman increases his advertising and grabs all the business within reach. He don't have to make mortgages to pay his bills.

There are times when you can't keep the customers away from your theatre even if you planted a squad of soldiers to keep 'em away. That's the time for advertising to accomplish its holy mission. You don't have to favor an ad. It is built for hard work and, by all means, should be sent out in the dull days when the patron must be knocked down with hard facts, slaughtered with all sorts of arguments and tempted with even reduced prices before they will spend a cent.

That just about sums up our little tale. But lend a willing ear, my children, and be guided by the experience of your brother showmen.

Advertising should be handed out, right between the eyes, in the dull season when you need 'em. If you fail to see the importance of that argument, then it's a million to a plugged nickle that you'll never wax rich or even smoke a good cigar once or twice a year.

"Write this down where you'll fall over it every day. THE TIME TO DRAW BUSINESS IS WHEN YOU WANT BUSINESS, AND NOT WHEN YOU HAVE MORE BUSINESS THAN YOU CAN ATTEND TO ALREADY."

Hendrick's Tie-up Is Signal Victory In War With Waugh

The "War with Waugh" rages. William L. (Bill) Hendricks, determined to overcome his adversary from Meridan, shoots in a couple of more stunts, their effectiveness enhanced by a couple of quips, and declares he has scored a bulls-eye.

Hendricks, who is now general manager of the Smoot & Lincoln Theatres in Parkersburg, W. Va., has been turning out some great stuff in his town since he left Steubenville. (Or maybe we should say he is continuing his Steubenville activity.) His latest stunt concerns a couple of tie-ups he arranged with the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Company to sell "Common Clay."

For his tie-up with the "Boys in Khaki" he arranged to secure sending blanks from them, upon which was printed the plug for the film. The telegrams were enclosed in envelopes and were delivered to every other house, the reason for the skipping of some houses being that the neighbor would wonder what sort of message Mrs. Nextdoor was getting. This tie-up was a whiz and it brought home the message that Hendricks was endeavoring to convey just as well as personal contact would have.

In the photo we are showing you can see the tie-up he made with Postal. The "Boys in Blue" delivered it to every merchant in town, and would leave it in the store a moment, then come back and state that it belonged to the business establishment alongside the store. Many persons noticed the sign as it was carried from place to place and it attracted considerable comment that resulted in a box-office gross out of the ordinary for the picture.

If you recall, you will remember that in a recent issue we showed a couple of Austin cars, with which Hendricks played "Tickle Golf" and explained that Howard Waugh uses them for polo. Now Hendricks tells us that the Scotchmen in the town use them for dimes banks, on the side. A calamity befell a number of Scotchmen the other day when two Austins collided and seventeen Caledonians tumbled.

Howard Waugh has been very busy of late since he deserted Meridan to seek thrills in Sleepy Hollow, but one of our spies reports that the prolific showman has been cooking up some good stuff. It seems that a number of Indians paid Howard a tribute not so long ago when they visited City Hall. All through their tribal dance, which they performed for the benefit of the Mayor and the rest of the "key hander out," they cried out, "Ooh Waugh! Ooh Waugh!"

Thanks, Hendricks, for shooting this in to us. We will have to admit that you are one lap ahead of Waugh; but a lap isn't a pretty safe margin, so let's have some more and we'll pass it along. Come on, Howard, let's have that little tale about the way the cream may be removed from cream puffs without breaking the crust. Pass it along to us.

David Silverman Enters Ether Lanes Publicizing Belmont

Having been selling shows at the Belmont Theatre in the Bronx, New York, David Silverman is pretty well established up there with his local merchants and the patrons of the house, consequently he is enabled to pull tie-ups, local talent shows and any other stunts that he thinks will be an aid to boosting business.

One of his recent tie-ups is proving a big good-will booster for the house and it isn't costing the theatre a cent. Silverman inaugurated a Fox Movie Radio Club recently and arranged to broadcast over a local station, the idea being the answering of queries pertaining to movies and the players. Being a wise showman, he saw to it that the questions pertained to coming attractions at the Belmont. The broadcast is a weekly feature and is proving to be a valuable medium.

This showman has been turning out some good work up around his neighborhood, and as he is one of our active members, you can expect to see a lot more of his work in future issues of the Club pages. Keep it up, David.

Nowitzky's Gag Had "Maxim-um" Effect In Allentown, Pa.

It was the first time that the librarian of the Public Library in Allentown, Pa., had ever seen a waiting line at the institution; but there it was. The librarian had hundreds of requests for copies of a certain book of maxims or proverbs. She couldn't understand it; and it wasn't until she happened to glance through the columns of the Allentown, Pa. Morning Call that she was enlightened.

When he played "Raffles," Al Nowitzky, manager of the State Theatre in Allentown, secured the co-operation of the editors of the local paper and received their consent to inaugurate a conflicting proverb contest in the papers; the idea being to publish a well-known proverb such as, "The rolling stone gathers no moss," and have the contestants supply a conflicting one as, "The rolling snowball gathers snow."

This gag was originated by Jack Fuld, veteran exploiteer, well known to members of the film industry, and it has been used to great success wherever it has been pulled. Nowitzky, who has been at the State Theatre but a short time, coming there direct from Norfolk, Va., where he handled the local Loew house, knew just how to work it to best advantage, and the pulling power of his showmanship was seen in the lines at the library the day after the contest opened. Al is the brother of Ray Nowitzky, also a Club member, who manages the State Theatre in Reading, Pa. This is his first position North in some time and we are sure that he is going to continue the excellent showmanship that characterized his work down south. Keep us posted Al so that we can list you among the active.

Another Front Done By James McKoy Is Passed Along To Us

All of our members are no doubt familiar with the corking display work that James H. McKoy, manager of the Olympia Theatre in Miami, Fla., turns out to plug his shows. His latest one on "Under A Texas Moon" was so good that the residents were talking about it for a week after it had been taken down and for that reason we decided to reproduce it on this page in order that you might see the special touches he added to it.

One week in advance there was placed in the lobby a ten-foot display of Frank Fay on horseback. This was surrounded with rocks and was lighted with three spots—green, red and blue. The title of the picture appeared at the bottom of the display.

Another inside display was taken from the six-sheet which was an unusually good lithograph. By applying shellac to the litho it gave the effect of the work of a crafty artist. Behind this six-sheet was a very large yellow moon on which was imprinted, "Hear Frank Fay Sing UNDER A TEXAS MOON."

Listen, "J. H." As you know, we've shown a good many of your displays in the past and it has always been pretty hard for us to tell which of them was the best of the lot as they seemed to get better every time. How about you picking out a few of your best and shooting them in to us together with a description of the coloring, etc., so that we can give the dope to your fellow-members?

WHAT IS EXPLOITATION?

Webster Says:

Exploit: To make use of for one's own profit; put to use; explore in search of; explain at length.

Exploitation: The act of exploiting; an examination to utilize natural resources previously neglected.

Whitbeck Says:

JUST what the hell is "exploitation" . . at the same time—what the ditto is "Ballyhoo?"

Today we are carrying the burden of precedent established in show business twenty years ago . . in the movie game as far back as fifteen years ago . . we've never outgrown it, maybe we never will—because those in high spots haven't the courage to inaugurate something new and issue orders to those in minor capacities to follow suit.

Exploitation, of a certain kind, will sell theatre tickets . . so will ballyhoo . . but it must be the right kind—it must be well thought out and intelligent.

A few months ago . . in the Hollywood office of a famous producer . . "Eyes of the World" was under discussion—the advertising possibilities of this famous Harold Bell Wright story—its modernization . . the legitimate hookup with publishers and book stores because of the two million copies that had been sold . . when up spoke a very high salaried executive from the east—a man who admitted that he, personally, was responsible for the success of several stars and quite a few pictures—and this genius said . .

"Exploitation . . we've got two national hook-ups for 'Eyes of the World' that are naturals . . imagine this—we've got a hook-up with 'Murine,' the eye wash; every drug store in town will have a card in the window that will read . . 'Keep your eyes clear and bright so that you may see Eyes of the World'." Then . . get this one . . we've got a tie-up with the National Association of Opticians and Oculists . . and all over the country, too."

There you are . . one man's idea of exploitation. He has a perfect right to his opinion . . and so have I. I'm not telling you this to belittle that man . . but to cite an instance of where exploitation may go wrong.

Why Murine and opticians when you have a picture founded on a book that sold into the millions . . written by a man whose name is a household word. If the story wasn't any good in the first place—if the title didn't mean anything . . what in hell prompted them to make the picture? The producers depended upon that title, on the worth of the story, on the author's name and the number of copies sold . . beside the acting of their cast and the production—to sell tickets at the box office where the picture is playing. If that's true . . then why dump everything overboard and hook your chances for success on an eyewash and a pair of spectacles?

A few months ago I saw a picture advertised by a baking company just on the strength of the announcement that . . "Joe Doakes bread was used in Such-and-such a picture at the Blankety-blank Theatre." If you were going to buy theatre tickets, would the bread used in the production propel you toward that box-office?

I remember some months ago Wally Beery and Raymond Hatton were making a Swiss mountains picture . . and the press sheet exploitation suggestion was . . have a contest of yodelers on your stage and give a loving cup to the best one. You, or anybody else, would shoot the third yodeler that started to sing.

You remember the classic of them all—and this is a fact . . one bright exploiteer suggested that managers make a contact with the local fire department to take the hook-and-ladder to the outskirts of the town and make a test run against time to the front of the theatre. Then . . have a banner on the side of the truck giving the name of your picture and theatre. The idea was . . to let the people of the city know what an efficient fire department their town had.

You think these are far fetched? They're not . . and for confirmation I'll refer you to any press sheet week after week and from any studio.

Exploitation . . to me—is a stunt such as Nat Holt pulled with his bathing beauty contest where every important merchant in town entered a girl . . and the stunt broke into an eight-page section in the Wichita newspapers. A stunt such as Doudlah, of Pomona, pulled when each of the important merchants entered a girl in a personality contest and it broke into an eight-page section. A stunt such as A. M. Bowles and Bob Harvey pulled with their Anniversary show in San Francisco and ran up the biggest business in the history of the Fox Theatre. That's exploitation . . that's showbusiness and showmanship.

IT IS surprising, in this age of modern showmanship, how few people know what exploitation really is. When we made it a point to ask some questions about it we received some of the queerest answers conceivable. One man's idea of high-powered exploitation, was giving away a thousand circulars. Another thought that a flock of window displays was good. Still others had many and sundry explanations for this important element of show-business.

We, therefore, decided to let a group of our managers express themselves on the subject. And as a happy coincident, Frank Whitbeck happened to discuss exploitation in a recent issue of NOW, the West Coast House Organ. Starting off with this first definition, we follow it up with many others. Read them over carefully, then tell us what YOU would call real exploitation.

"CHICK"

Lea Duhamel is publicity director for the Paramount Theatre, Providence, R. I. Watch her smoke, boys—she knows her onions!

Now Listen to Lea Duhamel:

Exploitation!

That form of theatrical advertising which, when properly executed, can work as many wonders for a production as the rubbing of Aladdin's Lamp.

Exploitation is anything that will cause the people to talk about our productions; clever exploitation is any stunt that will bring the money in at our box-offices, for, after all, that is the goal at which we aim. The whole essence is telling people through every possible means at our disposal, plainly and intelligently what we have to sell, thereby creating interest.

Just as the department store merchant carefully figures the difference between the cost and selling price of an article, so the showman must carefully figure out just what return he receives at his box office for the amount of money he spends. If he spends an enormous amount on a stunt and his business drops off, the money has been wasted except for the fact that he has possibly created a certain amount of good will for the theatre.

We of the theatre should be at all times mindful of the good will of the community. Never execute a stunt that will offend race, color or creed. Equally important is the necessity of carefully shunning anything cheap or vulgar. Such exploitation hurts the theatre, will possibly hurt the star which we are trying to exploit and it may take weeks to counteract the damage done.

The ideal form of exploitation consists in decided novelties. Something different. Something that will make the public talk and, what is more important, make them go to the theatre even if they have to break previous engagements so do so. It is impossible to list exploitation stunts here as each picture or star has individual selling angles.

Plan your campaign as far in advance as possible. Drive selling angles over clearly. Have any stunt as directly tied up with the show as is possible. In most cases it can be directly tied up but once in a while, the press agent can start the ball rolling with the idea of tying it up within a few days. In certain cases this is advisable, but when the final bang comes be sure the stunt is tied up strongly.

Ideas that have been worked out by other showmen are valuable. If they have made money for them, why can't these same ideas make money for us? Very often it is possible to improve upon them, and by all means do so! After this has been done fire your heavy guns of original exploitation. No matter how good or how poor the idea may be, keep doing something. If one fails, the next idea may create a riot!

Ballyhoo is effective for reaching a large number of people with a short, quick "flash message." This is effective to theatrical advertising because of the harmony and natural working out of ideas tying in with productions.

One can remember the almost universal adoption of a wooden Indian as the recognized sign of the tobacconist as the means of individual recognition to that type of exploitation—but just as the Indian outwore his usefulness and the more modern sign was brought into service, so the rule applies to the theatre. Exploitation is the same wooden Indian "dressed up" with new ideas!

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

WHAT IS EXPLOITATION?

Jean La Roe Has Her Say:

All showmen will agree, I think, that there is a definite difference between exploitation and ballyhoo. To me, exploitation is any legitimate publicity that gets the show or the house before the public in a dignified manner.

Ballyhoo is just the reverse, striking out the word legitimate. Ballyhoo is the more flamboyant type of advertising, brought about by the use of extravagant statements in print, and by sandwich men and other pavement-pounders, cheap in themselves or they wouldn't be so engaged, and therefore tending to cheapen the theatre employing them.

Ballyhoo stops traffic, true. But does it bring the better class of patrons into the theatre? What is more important, does it make them regular every-week customers?

The main thing about exploitations is to get as much news space as possible, exclusive of ads. If a sketch or photograph is attractive to an editor, or a story interestingly written, he will be glad to give a "space splash." Two of the best rules for space-getting are (1) stick to the truth or what sounds like it, and (2) study your papers and keep your nose on the alert to smell a good news story any time or place.

CLIPPED STUFF,—OUT

No editor wants a fishy-sounding story palmed off on him—nor does he want the same story too often. If John Barrymore plays your theatre in June, and you use his biography in the paper, no one wants to read it all over again when he returns in another vehicle two months later. A good many stories clipped from press sheets are worthless for this and two other reasons.

Being ground out hastily and apparently carelessly, some are so ungrammatical that if not completely rewritten they are useless. An editor won't print something thats needs correction to make it readable. Neither will he print something that sounds like what it is—a fabrication from start to finish.

In preparing copy, we avoid the stories that seem too far-fetched. If WE don't believe them, we hesitate to ask editor or public to be more gullible. We re-write all stories, too, deleting what seems uninteresting and making necessary grammatical corrections—which necessity always makes me wonder how some copy-writers get, or hold, their jobs. We avoid "press lies," too, because if the public ever catches a theatre stretching the truth, how can you expect to be believed if you ever do get a really big yarn that is strange enough to make the front page?

As to stills and sketches, if one paper uses only heads and another likes action stills, we give them what they seem to print most lavishly. Often, too, I have been rewarded with a nice "break" by clipping sketches from here and there and pasting them up in one or two-column form, to look like the work of a caricaturist made exclusively for the paper to which it is submitted. The sketches of Arliss (clipped from a souvenir program of "Old English") are a good example. This paper also favors stills that will work up into one-column cuts. I give them that kind.

THIS is just the start-off. Follow this series closely, you'll get the slant of some mighty smart showmen on what this thing, called "Exploitation," is all about. And at the same time you will soon learn just what really constitutes this important phase of showmanship.

But, again we say, after you have read several of these items, sit down and write us a note telling what YOUR idea of exploitation is.

OKE?

Sometimes, too, it pays to carry a good photograph or an unusual pose to a staff artist with the query, "Wouldn't this work up into a nice sketch?" It generally does—and the space it covers is worth more than an ad twice the size. Here's a sketch of Lionel Barrymore (from "The Lion and the Mouse") that appeared in the Ohio State Journal.

Distribution of heralds, both through agencies and through music stores and the like—window displays wherever they seem to "fit in"—contests, whenever a new or unusual idea comes in mind—these are all valuable exploitation mediums.

CO-OPERATIVE ADS

Co-operative advertising, though overdone and therefore growing more and more difficult to "swing," is always an excellent plan, as M. F. Bragdon, our artist, proved only this week by selling an idea to the Coca Cola Company, who "came in" with us on a half-page ad that created no end of comment.

The feature ("Dancing Sweeties") mentions Coca Cola frequently so Mr. Neth and the artist thought a tie-up in order. They COULD have suggested it to one of papers—but we've done that before, only to lose a good idea by the failure of the ad man to put it across until too date to "peddle" somewhere else. So Mr. Bragdon turned salesman on his own account, with the results shown. Of course, the paper benefited with no effort, but our end was gained—so what of it? And maybe the same paper will do US a good turn some day.

As to ballyhoo, there are two types to which I am not averse. Although in three years' association I have absorbed much of Mr. Neth's distaste for undignified publicity, I don't think certain kinds of street music can be classed as undignified, even though they belong in the category of ballyhoo.

One is the Calliope, which we used just once, in connection with "Show Boat," and the other is the loud speaker in front of the theatre, by means of which records from the show may be played from the office. Both these mediums I consider very effective, especially the latter, which is bound to stop people in front of the theatre—and neither need be unsightly or annoying.

Other ballyhoo, such as a ragamuffin I once saw employed to push a cocoanut about town with a golf club, ballyhooing "The Cocoanuts," is not only far-fetched, but to me disgusting. Maybe I'm a bit prejudiced, but "them's my sentiments." A man dressed as an ape, walking about to ballyhoo "Mawas," is another degrading example, in my opinion. If they drew business, maybe the end would justify the means, but we have never been able to note such justification.

DON'T SPOIL FRONT

Street barkers; canvas or compo-board fronts for theatres (the kind that cover up all the beauty of a building that represents a high-salaried architect's brains); extravagant statements such as "900 balcony seats every night at 25c"—when the whole house seats only 850 or 900—these are what constitute ballyhoo, to me, and what we try to avoid.

A few times we've wondered if we were wrong, and have gone in for ballyhoo, it's true. But all of them put together weren't worth the effort. The latest deviation from our usual policy—and the latest successful flop—was a lady flagpole-sitter, who was a huge success as a free attraction perched on top of a hotel, but when she came down did the public rush the box office in an effort to see her? They did not! So, more than ever, we are "off" ballyhoo. In fact, the lady flagpole-sitter would never have been contracted had her manager not tied FIRST with one of the newspapers, after which the paper sold the scheme to Mr. Neth. Naturally, the newspaper was supposed to be back of the enterprise, which was why the deviation from policy. This, by the way, was the same young lady written up recently as having done tremendous business for a Terre Haute Theatre. Why not here, we thought, having seen Terre Haute papers—and we're still wondering.

Mr. Neth's theory (and mine, too) is: "The picture is what counts. If you have the picture you'll get the crowd." Poor pictures will flop, no matter how flamboyantly advertised. Personally I believe firmly in the star system—the stars to be selected by exhibitors individually. If a subordinate player happens to stand out ABOVE the star, so styled by contract, I believe in giving that player a break and star billing. We did that with Evelyn Brent once, before the producers even thought of starring her. The stars, in that case, didn't deserve the name.

And except in cases of well-advertised novels or former stage plays, titles of pictures mean nothing, except as they suggest cooperative tie-ups. Only occasionally does one intrigue by title only. You just have to study your public and announce your own "stars" according to merit and public sentiment (as often indicated in the theatre lobby as anywhere else, if you happen to be listening in). You can't force unwanted players down the public' throat even with the wildest kind of ballyhoo.

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME—OUT!

If you are located in one of those spots where the dearly beloved (?) daylight saving is still practiced, don't forget that it passes out the last Sunday of this month.

Besides acting as a reminder, this little announcement might give you an idea to work in conjunction with the "curtain" act for D. S. T.

Maybe it can be tied into your ads. Perhaps you can gag it for some free space in your hard-boiled daily. Nothing ventured—nothing gained.

Curious Customers Crowded Window To See Limerick Gag

To show us that he is going to continue being an active member of the Club, George Limerick, assistant manager of the Coleman Theatre in Miami, Oklahoma, shoots us in a couple of his latest stunts used for "The Cuckoos" which certainly had the town going cuckoo laughing at them.

Through a tie-up with a local dealer he managed to secure valuable space in a window situated in a most advantageous spot. In the window he placed some exhibits which he labeled "Cuckoo Curios." The curios were corkers. "Cuckoo Eggs," "Napoleon's razor," "Gold Dust," "Set of Hen's Teeth," "Square Cuckoo Eggs," and many other exhibits were included, all of them real laugh provokers. Persons could be seen standing almost by the hour at the window, and the window was always sporting a crowd, laughing loudly at the unique display. The result was, of course, good, with the lines forming four deep at the box-office on the opening day.

That wasn't all that Limerick did, though. In the other photo we are showing you can see the wrecked car, which, through a tie-up with the local garage, who in return for a placard announcing that they featured a wrecking service, that was placed on the display, agreed to haul the junked auto out to a spot on the state highway, frequented by patrons of the Coleman as they drove in from farms, etc., and leave it there as a mute but laughing and effective plug for the film. A card was placed on the wreck stating that the occupants were "Going Too Fast to see 'The Cuckoos.'" Passing auto couldn't help but see the display and as the sign was attractively colored and so worded as to catch the eye they were sold almost immediately on the film, which is another way of bringing in business.

Then there's Limerick's house organ, very effectively made up, printed in black, four pages on yellow stock paper, devoted to jokes, stories on the coming attractions, and ads from the leading business establishments. The ads defray the cost incurred in printing. The program shows evidence of considerable care in copy, make-up and printing, and is doubtlessly one of the best mediums the house has for bringing them in. It is delivered to the residents of three states, the state lines being not far away from Miami—and many requests come in for it. We hope, in the near future, to publish a few samples of this house organ; but as we are rather cramped for space at this time we are unable to use the one we have on hand.

Thanks, George for letting us see what Mr. Griffin and you are doing to keep them coming strong at the Coleman. Keep up your good work and remember that we are always glad to hear from you.

Dave Borland Inserted Teaser Ad That Caused Talk

Preparing his campaigns for the presentation of his new season productions, Dave Borland, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre in Regina, Sask., Canada, has been pretty busy; but he managed to find time to pass along to his fellow Club members a little stunt that Pete Egan and himself created as a teaser for "Common Clay."

In the classified ad section of the local newspaper Borland placed the ad which we are reprinting below.

Help Wanted (Female)

WANTED

500 Stenos, Housewives and Clerks too see Constance Bennett in "Common Clay." A picture made to order for you, now playing the Metropolitan Theatre. Don't miss it.

It's a good gag, isn't it? And the best part of it was that the big "Wanted" attracted the eye of any one whose glance fell upon the page. The stunt went over very well, with fine business being recorded during the run of the film. This medium of advertising, a very effective one, done at a minimum cost, has often proven itself to be of great value, and many showmen use it whenever they want to create a flash out of the ordinary. Perhaps you are using it now, or, if you are not, perhaps you'd like to give it a play. You know your local situation better than we do, so think it over, and if it will fit, use it with the compliments of Dave Borland and Pete Egan. Thanks, Dave, for shooting this along; and we want you to know that we look forward to some great work from you on your selling of the new pictures.

Pretty Girl Posed As Live Display For G. Hoffman's Stunt

A real live ballyhoo (or perhaps we should say "window display") that had Anniston, Ala. talking, was the stunt pulled by G. E. Hoffman, manager of the theatre when he engaged a young lady to pose in a window, her hands bound by handcuffs, as a plug for "Manslaughter."

For two days in advance of playdate, the girl posed in a prominent department store window—with handcuffs securely fastened to her wrists. She was also attired in evening dress similar to the make-up of Claudette Colbert in the picture.

In the store window was placed a special color painting on compoboard with three-inch silver tinsel border made into a standee. Neatly lettered cards also formed a part of the window display; the cards carrying copy relative to the picture, theatre and playdates.

Hoffman also extended invitations to four civic clubs in the city, designating each night as a special club night. The editor of the paper gave this stunt publicity and this added invitation brought more in, as the guests brought someone else with them.

K. L. ADAMS Says:

"I receive several magazines pertaining to Motion Pictures but I can honestly say that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has more in it than all the rest of them combined and I look forward to it weekly and have found several good ideas in it that I can put to good use in the few issues that I have received."

Lyceum Front Is Out Front Among Duluth, Minn. Fronts

As a novel advance plug to inform the patrons of the Lyceum Theatre in Duluth, Minn., that "All Quiet on the Western Front" was shortly to play at his house, Morris Rosenthal, manager of the theatre, who is well known to his fellow members of the Round Table Club, engaged the services of an artist to paint sketches in the lobby.

The artist appeared in the lobby at the peak hours for one week in advance of picture—painting sketches of scenes from the picture. A card alongside the easel stated that the scenes being sketched were from "All Quiet on the Western Front," the picture to be shown the following week. He usually had a flock of patrons watching him—all of which made mighty fine publicity for the picture.

Rosenthal also had a very attractive front which was constructed wholly out of beaverboard with a generous supply of cut-outs as well as letters over the entrance doors spelling out the title of the picture.

In order that you may get a better idea of what this front looked like we are reproducing it in conjunction with this story. Though it is a little too dark for perfect reproduction, we think that you will be able to pick out its most important features. We would also like to point out the effective copy that Morris uses on his marquee, and the display. This is typical of the work he turns out at the house and as he is one of our most active members we know that we will have some more of it to pass along in the future. Keep us posted, Morris.

Smart Back On The Job Again At New Capitol, Port Hope

Now that he is back in the active fold again, we look forward to hearing and seeing more of the work turned out by J. S. Smart, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Port Hope, Ontario, Canada.

The Capitol, newly opened, was built by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation to replace an old one formerly operated by them, but closed by a recent government regulation. The new house was designed by one of the leading theatre architects in Canada and is considered one of the most beautiful houses in the Dominion. The interior is atmospheric, representing an Old English garden. Furnishings and equipment are of the best, and represent the latest in theatrical design.

For the opening campaign Smart turned out some excellent showmanship. A special newspaper section was secured through the co-operation of the local editors. The section was jammed full of stories and ads. The ads were promoted from the local merchants. The special newspaper section was distributed to every one within a radius of 20 miles and proved to be one of the most effective mediums of the entire campaign. Five hundred tack cards informed the public that the new house was about to open its doors. A captive balloon above the theatre attracted a great deal of word-of-mouth comment, with a radio announcement over the most powerful station in Ontario running it a close first for a "talk getter."

We want to wish Smart lots of luck with his new assignment and we hope that he is going to be represented often on our pages so that his fellow members and Canadian showmen can see what he is doing. And listen, "J. S." How about a photo and a little dope on yourself when you send in your next contribution?

AMERICAN EDUCATION WEEK Nov. 10th to 16th

Few events offer the tremendous possibilities of American Education Week for the purpose of getting your theatre a wealth of publicity and attracting attention.

Each year this event is growing in importance until now it can be the means of giving your theatre a marvelous break with the local civic and school authorities.

Offer your screen. Run special shows if possible. Give it prominent program mention. Co-operate in every possible way with the grammer and high schools.

Read what Dr. H. R. Evans, of the editorial division of the Office of Education, Department of the Interior, had to say in his recent announcement:

The idea of an annual education week was first conceived by the Office of Education in 1920, which promoted plans for the first observance. Interest in the idea grew so rapidly, however, that it soon became impossible for the Federal Office, with its personnel and facilities, to handle the amount of work incident to its proper observance. The National Educational Association and the American Legion were invited to co-operate with the Federal Office, and the three organizations since have jointly sponsored the occasion.

Committees in the various States and localities are now beginning to plan programs for their own celebration of the event. The purpose is to acquaint the public with the activities, ideals, achievements and needs of the schools.

Many organizations, national, State and local, including the Rotary International, the National Federation of Women's Clubs, and others, will co-operate in the event. The press, the radio, the pulpit and the platform will aid in carrying information to the public about the schools. Interest in the occasion is increasing each year, and more extensive plans have been made for 1930 than ever before.

Wide Variety of Programs Wanted

A wide variety of suggested programs have been planned and made available for all schools throughout the country, with a suggested theme to be given especial emphasis in each day's program. The suggested topics around which programs are built include "The Schools and the Enrichment of Human Life," "How Schools Promote Patriotism and World Understanding," "The Schools of Yesterday," "The Schools of Today," "What the Schools Have Helped Individuals to Achieve," "What the Schools Have Helped America to Achieve," and "The Schools of Tomorrow and the Future of America."

Single communities will probably not wish to make use of all the suggestions, but selections will be made by local communities in accordance with community needs, and will be developed and adapted according to local conditions. Each community will create its own organization for the observance of the event.

During the week the basis may be laid for co-operation of the community and the school throughout the year. Observance of the week offers a splendid opportunity to strengthen an effective continuing program of school interpretation. Throughout the Nation during the week the public focuses its attention upon the schools. The newspapers, magazines, the pulpit, the radio, every medium which expresses opinion, aids in making American Education Week a good start for the year's interpretation of the schools.

Every educational agency in the community may co-operate with the schools in providing programs in life enrichment for both children and adults by stressing the wise employment of increased leisure.

The week is planned to include Armistice Day, Nov. 11, to afford a better opportunity for stressing the idea of patriotism and international good will.

Many Organizations Will Participate

Each of the 10,000 posts of the American Legion plans to devote the Nov. 11 program to the theme of world understanding and good will. In many communities such organizations as the Grand Army of the Republic, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Sons of the American Revolution, the United Daughters of the Confederacy, the United Spanish War Veterans, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, will participate in the program.

Get behind this thing right now and start your planning. Tie-ups in connection with such events require careful planning. It is not too soon to get started.

KOPPLIN KICKS; GIVES REASON WHY

"The breaks are coming my way," wails our friend, Harold A. Kopplin, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Miami, Florida.

Vacationing at Waynesville, North Carolina, a pretty little spot in the mountains, Hal had the misfortune to sprain his ankle while indulging in a game of tennis just ten days after he left Miami. Which explains why he hasn't been represented on our pages for a month or so.

Well anyway, there was one great benefit derived from Hal's enforced lay-off. He had plenty of time in which to think over his campaigns for the coming season. And with another year behind him, and a bigger year ahead of him, Hal is going to try to pass along some new ones to his fellow members of the Club this season. Right?

Fast Track Showmanship Flashes Eddie Under Line

In response to the box we ran not so long ago entitled "Organs and Organists," a number of requests have come into Club headquarters asking us to pass along a few examples of how the various showmen put on their organ solos. Selecting one that we deemed a corker, submitted to us by S. S. Solomon, city manager for Publix in Youngstown, Ohio, we are presenting it here in its entirety. Look it over and perhaps you will be able to use it in your town also. As you know, a careful study of the other fellow's methods will generally be productive of a few slants on which you can build your own. Solomon is a showman of many years' experience and we are sure that this account will be well received. The organ soloist at the house is Eddie Paddock.

EDDIE PADDOCK'S ORGAN SOLO
Entitled
"The Trial of Eddie Paddock."
Week starting Saturday, Sept. 13.

Cast of Characters:

1. Prisoner.
2. Judge.
3. Singer.
4. Policeman.
5. Jury.

Scenario:

The act opens with a black-out as stage props are placed on stage center. The Judge, properly robed, raps for the next case on the docket. As stage lights go up, the Judge again makes his demand and a voice offstage repeats twice: "The Manager of the State Theatre against Eddie Paddock."

Preceding an officer of the law, Eddie Paddock marches down the center aisle from back of auditorium until he reaches organ console.

Judge asks Paddock to answer to the plea of "Guilty" or "Not Guilty." Paddock requests that the charge be read in detail. Judge then reads:

"The manager of the State Theatre requests that Eddie Paddock be sent to jail because of false statements made, in as much as said Eddie Paddock claims he is an organist and in addition has the personality to influence the audience of the State Theatre to sing."

The Judge then turns to Paddock and asks: "Guilty or Not Guilty?" Paddock emphatically replies: "Not Guilty." Whereupon the Judge asks Paddock if he is ready for trial and Paddock answers "Yes."

The Judge then stands and addresses the audience:

"In the name of the people of Youngstown, I appoint this entire audience to decide the fate of Eddie Paddock.

"First, Eddie Paddock, as an organ soloist, will be Exhibit A. Play!"

(Paddock now plays a verse and chorus from "Don't Tell Her," giving it everything he has.)

Midst the applause, the Judge raps for order very heavily and in a loud angry voice, admonishes the jury with:

"What do you think this court is, a place of amusement? Order, please. Well, Eddie Paddock, you now have one foot in jail and one foot out. We now come to Exhibit B. Will the audience sing with you? Prisoner, face the jury and tell this intelligent assemblage of ladies and gentlemen the title of the song you hope they will sing with you."

Paddock then announces that the number he has just played is "Don't Tell Her," and asks the jury to help him out by singing. Plays another chorus, with slides, and a girl plant sitting about third row center shyly starts about the middle of chorus and ends strongly. Without any ado, she stands up and sings another chorus, leaving audience to come in forte on the final chorus.

'Midst the applause Paddock runs out of console pit and chases policeman down the aisle to back of auditorium, while Judge stands with an expression of mute approval of audience applause.

Blackout.

The judge and the policeman in the sketch were secured from a local dramatic school, at no cost to the house, the only expense incurred being the salary of the girl, a professional singer.

Whirr! Rose Rose To Occasion With Trailer Prologue

Trailer prologues are being adopted everywhere. Since we first presented this idea on the Round Table pages a great many showmen have set to work and are now presenting their trailers in a manner that sells everyone witnessing them. The latest one, that we have on hand, is the stunt used by Walter B. Rose, manager of the Strand Theatre in Brockton, Mass., to sell "The Dawn Patrol."

The regular trailer was introduced by a special trailer of punch lines ending with, "Here He Comes! Look Out! Above you! Behind you! Look Out!" At this point a small practical aeroplane was sent from the booth to back stage on a wire. A spotlight was thrown on the miniature plane during its downward flight from the projection booth to the stage. This was accompanied by an aeroplane-effect record ending in machine gunfire as the plane crashed back stage. The crash was pepped up by firing a gun in a can back stage. The regular trailer then followed.

Rose also used a street stunt one week in advance that helped to sell the picture. A man in aeroplane togs on the streets asked people to step on the scales—and register their names and weights with him. The fifty weighing the nearest to Barthelmess' weight were to receive a pass to see the picture, The correct weight was not made known until opening day of picture. The punch in this stunt was the sales talk that the man gave while the crowd watched the ones getting weighed and registered.

We are glad to note that Walter is making good use of the trailer angle and is also continuing his well-known brand of street ballyhooing. Listen, Walter, keep us posted on your future work so that we can keep tabs on your showmanship.

"Caught Short" Saw Feiman Floating New Show Issues

Hardly a week goes by that Irving Feinman, manager of the Culver Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., doesn't have some special stunt to use in conjunction with the selling of the film attractions playing the house and he's good enough to pass them on to us.

When he played "Caught Short" recently he set to work and devised a novel street ballyhoo that proved very effective from a monetary as well as a publicity standpoint. In the photos we are showing you can see the various stunts he pulled. The top photo shows a ticker which was placed in the lobby of the theatre. As the tape unwound, ticking off the day's market reports, people gathered around, and, as the Culver is a neighborhood house, and the patrons had not seen a ticker in actual operation before, they paid plenty of attention to it. A cut-out along side the ticker informed the lookers-on that the the picture was to play the theatre in a short while.

The street ballyhoo also occasioned much hilarity. Two young men were dressed in kilts, draped with a whisk broom and a hot water bottle. The men carried signs on their back announcing that they lost their pants in the stock market when they were "Caught Short." Following the men who were caught short was a patrol of Boy. Scouts, who pulled after them a coaster wagon, on which was mounted a phonograph with a laughing record playing constantly. This angle, as the wagon was concealed from view with the scouts grouped around it, had the residents of the neighborhood mystified; and when a particularly busy spot was reached, or a fair sized crowd gathered, the scouts would step aside, revealing the gag. They would then pass out heralds on the film, while the record continued to screech out its laughter. The entire neighborhood spoke of this rib-tickler and the comment more than portended a couple of days of big business, a prophecy which later came true.

And now here's how Irving greets newcomers to the neighborhood. A shoe dealer, specializing in ladies' footwear, started a business near the theatre and offered souvenirs for the grand opening. The souvenirs were shoe trees; and when Irving found this out he immediately promoted three thousand of them, which were printed up with a plug on the theatre and on the shoe store.

By placing a card in the lobby, the ladies were informed of the fact that the house was going to give something away. They were more than pleased with the shoe trees, particularly since they happened to be an item which was more or less omitted whenever shoes were purchased. And we might also mention that Irving shot us in a bunch of them for Mrs. Chick; but if we have to shell out for the number of pairs of shoes necessary to fit them all, there's going to be trouble. Anyway, Irving, we want to thank you for your thoughtfulness and also let you know that we are glad to see you are continuing your live-wire work.

"All For One And One For All"

JUST GOOD COMMON SENSE

If filling stomachs was like filling seats, we could readily see where some showmen would starve to death with a fat juicy steak in each hand.

Strolling down the street, just last week, we were surprised to see a theatre playing "One Romantic Night," but keeping Marie Dressler's connection with the cast a deep, dark secret. And then further on we noticed another theatre playing "Sins Of the Children" and making no mention whatsoever of Robert Montgomery.

The above represents just two examples of poor showmanship. We can cite many other instances where marvelous shorts were treated like step-children when they deserved top billing and marquee mention.

If you have stars and attractions to sell, why not get behind them?

Baker Opened Ritz With Local Tie-Ups And Novel Stunts

In view of the fact that he has had his hands full getting set to open the Ritz Theatre in San Bernardino, California, we will excuse Wallace J. Baker, the manager of the new house for not getting in touch with us for some time.

The campaign that Baker turned out was one that covered nearly every angle. The newspapers carried special ads, heralds, billboards and many other mediums, all well known to showmen, conveyed to the neighborhood that a new house was to open. Being in close touch with the studios of Warner Bros. since the Ritz is a house belonging to the corporation, Baker was enabled to secure a number of the actual properties used in the filming of the picture "Moby Dick" which was playing, or was shortly to play the house. This angle proved to be a corker. The display was placed in the window of one of the more prominent stores of the town and lots of interest was paid it.

But to get back for a moment to explain the photo showing the local baker cutting a cake. This cake was promoted through Baker's activity at no cost to the theatre and was handed out to the patrons as they left the house on the opening night. In order to stimulate interest it was placed in the window of the bake shop with a large placard announcing the occasion. The stunt was productive of a lot of good-will for the house and the crowds of people that jammed the theatre on the opening night more than proved the strength of Baker's campaign.

Listen Wally, we expect to hear a lot from you in the very near future regarding the way you are putting the Ritz over because we know you are capable of turning out some fine work. So keep us posted on it so that we can pass it along to your fellow club members who are also interested in knowing what you are doing. Oke?

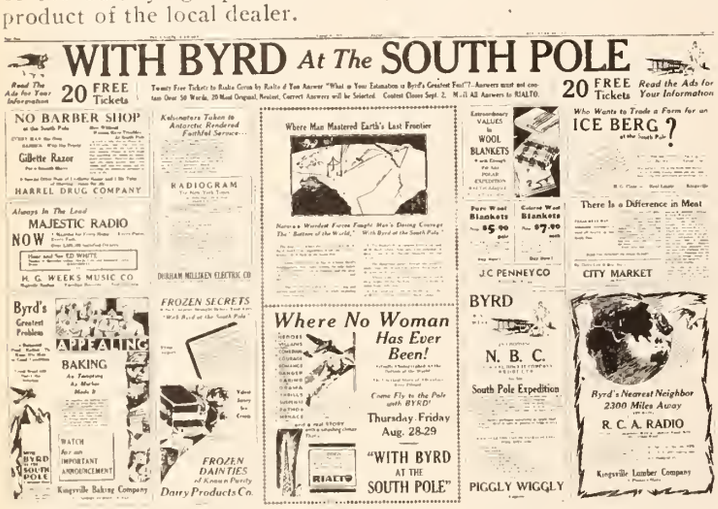
RINGING UP A RECORD

Floyd Bell, publicity chief for the Publix Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, rang up a record for free space when he promoted almost seven thousand lines in his local papers.



That's "space grabbing" in spades—and Floyd ought to get a medal for doing it.

McClellan Treats His Town To Big-Town Showmanship

Knowing his town as he does enables C. S. McClellan to turn out some excellent showmanship and keep business buzzing at the Rialto Theatre in Kingsville, Texas, through the use of very effective newspaper mediums as witness the ad below.

When he played "With Byrd at the South Pole," he decided that a double truck co-operative spread would be one of his most potent mediums in plugging the film. He went about the town and signed up a number of prominent dealers for space and if you'll look at the cut we are reproducing you can see the corking layout he achieved. We would also like to point out to you the judicious use of copy that is worked into all of the ads, tying up the name Byrd or South Pole with the product of the local dealer.

The above angle is one which seems to be of great importance as it brings home more forcibly the name of the picture, and, as a great many showmen know, constant repetition is bound to make the product of picture that you are plugging sink in and stay in. In order to stimulate interest you will also notice that McClellan has offered 20 tickets for the best article on "What I Consider Byrd's Greatest Feat." In a small but progressive place like Kingsville, the success of this angle depends more or less on the mood of the public. There has been times when McClellan had more replies than he could take care of, and, then, there has been times when he hadn't enough; however, he always manages to turn in a week of fine business when he sets out to pull a gag of this kind, and when that is, after all, what every showman wants, he is more than satisfied.

We notice, also, that he ran an excellent co-operative ad on "Hold Everything"; but since we are rather cramped for space, as we want to present as much variety as possible in newspaper lay-outs, we were unable to reproduce it. It was made up along the same lines as the Byrd ad, with the exception that his contest this time was one in which the contestants were awarded tickets for submitting the title of the picture, letters comprising which could be found inserted in all of the ads. The local dealers were very much pleased with this stunt as it insured their ad getting plenty of first-hand attention. Perhaps you are using this stunt, too, so you know its value. If you are not, the next time you want to use a co-operative ad think it over, and maybe you will decide to use it.

At this time we'd like to announce that F. D. Nance, former manager of the house, is now connected with the main office of the Hall Industries Theatres at Beeville, Texas; so if any of his friends were wondering where he had gone, there's the lowdown. We want to thank McClellan for passing his stuff along to us, and we know that we will hear from him again shortly. Right, "C. S."?

Ted Toddy Selling "Rain Or Shine" Sez "Fair And Warmer"

It would be useless, think we, to attempt to catch Ted Toddy in any one place, especially since he has been stepping on the gas down the South and exploiting "Rain or Shine" in the principal cities. This live-wire exploiteer, who has been in the show game for a great many years, certainly knows his stuff when it comes to securing free newspaper space and other forms of publicity.

When in Memphis recently he tied up with the Coca Cola Company and they supplied him with twenty thousand miniature bottles containing a couple of swallows of their beverage. The samples were distributed at the theatre, appropriate copy tying in the picture and the company. Toddy arranged to have the film delivered by plane and in this manner was enabled to crash the local papers for a three-column picture.

By a tie-up with a local automobile dealer he was enabled to secure 15 new models, which were drafted into service in the form of a parade. The cars, appropriately bannered with copy relative to the Joe Cook film, were driven about the main streets of the town. He tied up a local milk company and they distributed ten thousand heralds with their deliveries. All of the delivery wagons were bannered. Another tie-up with the maker of a nationally known soap was productive of five thousand samples. The samples were given away in the more prominent stores in the city. The back of the wrapper carried copy on the film and the soap.

For a street ballyhoo Toddy arranged for five boys, attired in rain coats, and carrying umbrellas, to parade about the town. This gag occasioned plenty of laughter and was found to be an effective ballyhoo. The local street cars all carried half sheets with copy reading, "Ride the street cars to see Joe Cook." Tire covers were distributed to the leading cab companies. The local restaurants and hotels featured special heralds. Another effective street ballyhoo was the use of a calliope.

From Memphis, Ted jumped over to New Orleans and repeated the same stunts, with a couple of exceptions, in which he engineered some more tie-ups and promoted peanuts, soft drinks, samples of sugar, etc., as well as tying up the local newspaper on a contest. His next jump, to Little Rock, Ark., proved to be profitable also, and he managed to put the film over to great success there. At this time we would like to ask you to remember that these stunts can all be used in conjunction with any film you may happen to be playing. It is not necessary to have a "Rain or Shine" to make use of them. We want to thank Ted for the box of samples he sent us and to let him know that we want to hear some more from him.

Hugh Smart Secures Co-operation From Local Organization

Co-operation could easily be the middle name of Hugh Smart, as he seems to get plenty of it whenever he wants it in his town. Through the co-operation of the local post of the American Legion he arranged with them to sponsor a beauty show to be held on the stage of his house, the Montgomery, in Spartanburg, S. C.

The beauty show not only proved to be well handled, but also played to a capacity audience, with a turn-away being necessary. The house was jammed when the score of girls paraded on the stage at the first evening performance.

The entire contest was staged at practically no cost to the theatre except providing a fitting stage set. The local newspaper entered into the contest in a helpful manner and, as a result, Smart received more than 15 columns of free publicity. The audience determined the winning girl, who was later to be an entry in a state-wide competition sponsored by the various posts of South Carolina.

We would like to state that a beauty show can be held at any time of the year and if interest in stunts of this kind happen to be strong enough in your town you know how to handle them. Thanks, Hugh, for letting us see this one, and remember we'd like to have more, too.

Brock Shifts To New York And Already Is Showing Stuff

That showman, W. F. Brock, who formerly managed the Tennessee Theatre in the southern state, seems to take to New York and its show climate like a duck to water, judging from the work he is doing to put over Greater Talkie Season at the Kingsbridge Theatre in the Bronx, N. Y., the house to which he has recently been transferred.

Beginning one week in advance of "Greater Talkie Season" a special sound trailer calling attention to the coming features and the many novelties that the new season would introduce was placed on the screen. Special three-sheet and window cards were made up and placed in the windows of local merchants in advance. Five thousand tabloid papers were distributed and one of the most effective means of distribution was secured by Brock, who tied up the neighboring newsstands, the owners of which inserted the tabloids in all of the morning papers sold.

In his lobby Brock placed a specially designed set piece. This art work was created and carried out by Brock, who has no house artist, being forced to do his own work. Fortunately he is very skilful with the brush and the house is getting better displays than it has seen in a long time. The copy on the card stated: "Celebrating! The second anniversary of talking entertainment. Greeting! The new era of technical and artistic perfection in sound. Promising! Greater comfort and luxury in all Fox theatres. Announcing! A new season of smarter, greater enjoyment and the cream of Talking Attractions." The inner lobbies were completely decorated, in a modernistic design, with crepe paper of varied colors. A novel touch was injected in so much that the paper, instead of being twisted, as is usually the case, was rolled into a tube form. Through this medium the atmosphere of the lobbies was changed, several small pieces being placed on the ceiling and lighting fixtures tending to enhance the effect.

The front of the theatre was decorated with pennants and flags, with special bannered pennants plugging the coming attractions also being used. Through the courtesy of the Edison Company, Brock was permitted to draw a streamer across their light posts on both sides of the theatre. A tie-up with the local merchants netted him 5,000 paper bags, carrying the Talkie Season plug. The bags were used by the merchants for all goods sold.

These few stunts set forth here formed the foundation for Brock's campaign. He also took advantage of the many other mediums with which a showman comes in daily contact; but since they are all known to you, we have refrained from talking about them. We want to thank Brock for letting us see what he is doing, and we know that if he continues the same brand of showmanship he will more than break the record he set when he operated in the South.

"ACTIVE MEMBERS"

Being an Active Member in the Club merely consists of taking the little time necessary to write and explain how you put over the various pictures; what new slant you have on theatre operation; what local angles you have found profitable in creating good-will, etc.

Items in this nature, together with any photographs you can send us, are what the Club members and readers of our pages like to follow. M. R. T. C.

Short Transformed Lobby Into Beauty Shop As Bow Plug

It would be almost impossible for any one to attempt to catalogue the stunts that Paul Short has pulled since he has been managing the Tampa Theatre in Tampa, Florida, so we'll have to pass along this one to add to the pile which is rapidly growing.

When he played Clara Bow in "Love Among the Millionaires," he decided to feature a Clara Bow haircut, and in order to do it up proper he tied up the leading beauty shops of the city.

Five beauty shops co-operated to the extent of featuring the new hair cut with appropriate stills, panels, copy, etc. The windows of these beauty shops looked unusually attractive.

Another of the popular local beauty shops went a step further in co-operating to make the Clara Bow Bob a popular attraction. This particular beauty shop set up headquarters in the lobby of the theatre on opening day of picture—remaining there until picture concluded its run, and the photo will show for the effectiveness of the stunt.

Art cards on either side of the beauty parlor equipment in the lobby contained copy reading, "Enjoy the New Clara Bow haircut—then be our guest to enjoy Clara Bow in Love Among the Millionaires. The temporary beauty parlor is being conducted by Mme. Himes, who hereafter will specialize in the Clara Bow Haircut at her beauty parlor at 502 Franklin Street."

The beauty parlor equipment, the attendants and girls actually in the chairs getting a Clara Bow haircut made the lobby an outstanding attraction in itself—in addition to help selling the picture to the public.

Paul's work has long been a source of considerable interest to the Club, and we are sure that he is going to keep us supplied with his future work, so that we can pass it along. Are we right, Paul?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"SOUND" SENSE!

When sound first came in, a state of chaos existed. The innovation was something with which the entire personnel of a theatre was unfamiliar. Some time elapsed before things were righted. In the big theatres, it was not so bad; but the small houses —how they suffered. They had no skilled engineers on hand to take care of any emergency that might arise. The house manager and the projectionist had to do everything. But it was certainly helpful. To-day, the small house, by reason of the fact that an intensive study of sound was made, can boast reproduction equal to that of the larger theatres.

The showman found out, shortly after the inception of sound, that alertness was one of the most vital factors. And it is that alertness that is enabling him to-day to boast of a bigger business from his neighborhood trade than ever before. The residents of the neighborhood, when they visit the local house to see a picture, do not want their enjoyment of the performance interrupted by discordant sound. If that happens they will soon forsake the theatre. And if it doesn't happen, it means that your house is going to increase in patronage. Watch your sound every moment. Then you can bill it honestly and truthfully as "the best in the neighborhood." And when people visit the house once, they will visit it again.

Mammoth Invitation Carried By Midget Car Caused Comment

Here it is—the photo we promised to show you concerning what Wally Allen is doing to bring them in to the Loew Theatres in Jersey, Brooklyn and New York.

The monster telegram in the picture is being presented to the borough President of the Bronx. This stunt was so successful that it was duplicated in Yonkers, Jersey City and Brooklyn. The copy on the telegram, which served as a plug for the "Fall Opening" inaugurated on the circuit, read: "You are cordially invited to attend the first program of Loew's Fall Opening starting August 30th in all Loew's Bronx Theatres. You'll remember September as Big Show Month."

Delivered in a large envelope by an Austin car, which may be perceived in the photo (if you look hard enough), it attracted no end of comment. The gentleman to the left of the telegram is Wally himself, in the flesh and a real talking picture (he's talked himself into more tie-ups than there are extras in pictures). We want to thank him for passing this stunt along.

Theatre Patrons Liked House Organ Created By Eccles

House programs, especially in the neighborhood theatres, are one of the most important of the selling factors. Many patrons read every line in the program and we have seen plenty of instances where they have hastened to correct any mistake that the management may have inserted; which is the best proof that we have of the attention paid.

In the past we have published any number of house organs and we'd like you to know that we are always willing to pass along yours so that your fellow showmen may see what you are doing along this line. The one we are reproducing below is used by Harry Eccles, manager of the Gem Theatre in Oakland, Calif.

The Gem is a neighborhood house and the copy must be made up simply in order to get across the desired message. In the lay-out you can see the plugs that Eccles gets in for his Mickey Mouse Club, his two for one ticket, and special stories on the coming attractions and the Gem policy. The program is made up in black on good stock yellow paper. The size is 4 by 6½ inches and it contains four pages, packed full with chatty copy.

Eccles is one of the real old timers in the show business. He has been connected with the movies almost from the time the three-reel features were the vogue, and we are sure that his many experiences of the old days would make good reading for the Club pages. We would like to hear some more from him and we hope that he will favor us with accounts of himself and his work.

Fine Show Selling Still On The Menu Out In Omaha, Neb.

Co-operating with local newspapers is always profitable. Knowing this, many showmen take especial pains to help out the editors whenever they can. In return for this courtesy it is often possible for them to secure valuable space free of charge. The value of this co-operation is seen in a recent tie-up that Charlie Pincus, Publix district manager in Nebraska, engineered in Omaha and Sioux City, with the local newspapers, through the contacts gained by Lionel Wasson and Gerald Gallagher, managers of the local houses.

Through the news columns of the Omaha Bee News and the Sioux City Journal, free theatre tickets were offered to automobile drivers whom motorcycle policemen observed using care and caution in driving. The traffic cops jotted down the automobile license numbers of the cars and turned them in to their chief who supplied the local dailies with ten numbers each day. The license numbers were printed in the news columns of the paper along with a glowing account of the motion picture "Manslaughter" current at the theatres.

This is a stunt that you, too, can pull any time you want to. You do not need any special picture to pull it on, as it will be found to fit with almost any production. Look it over and if you want to use it, oke—if not, hang on to it, anyway, as you can never tell when it will come in handy.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

DON'T PASS THIS UP!

Here's a tip! It's a valuable one, too! If you are paying from fifty to seventy-five cents for the popular dance tune records you are using on your non-sync to mark intermissions with, you can cut expenses to bits.

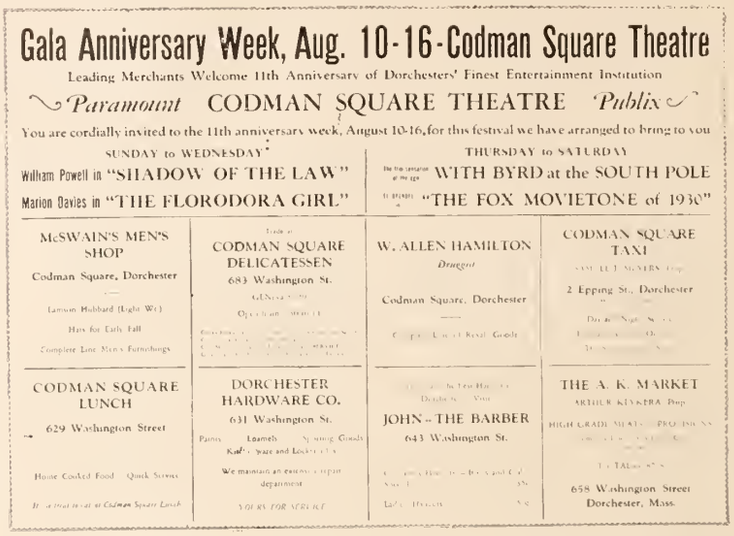
A number of showmen all through the country are cashing in by buying a certain type of record, which has just come out. The record is made of fibroid, costs FIFTEEN CENTS and is good for nearly a HUNDRED TIMES. What more can you ask for? They call the new disk, "Hit-of-the-Week" records. Each week a popular dance orchestra renders a new tune, with vocal chorus added. They are worth the dough. Grab them to-day.

Nutting Never Lets Anything By That Will Aid His House

One thing is certain—Floyd G. Nutting, manager of the State Theatre in Minot, N. Dak., knows what's going on in his town, no matter what time of day or night it may be, and when opportunity presents itself he ties it in with local events.

A car, owned by one of the residents of the town, had been unfortunate enough to stop on a railroad track just when a train came along. The car wreck was given plenty of space in the local newspapers, and, noting this, Nutting secured permission to have it towed over and parked in front of the theatre, where it was placed on view.

The auto was tagged on both sides with cards carrying copy that stated it had been driven by a woman. This copy was so worded as to tie in the female star of "For the Defense," a picture soon to play the State. The car proved an excellent interest getter and was productive of plenty of word-of-mouth comment, that resulted in box-office grosses when the picture advertised played the theatre.



We are glad to see that Mr. Nutting is right on tap with his showmanship. We note, in looking through our files, that we haven't a photo of this showman. How about sending one in to us, Floyd; and at the same time give us some dope on yourself?

Novel Herald Was Good Boost For The Anniversary Week

As theatres are celebrating anniversary weeks every now and then, in fact, daily—we are passing along a sample of the novel herald arranged by George V. Sweeney, assistant manager of the Codman Square Theatre in Dorchester, Mass., to plug the occasion.

The herald we are reproducing was made up in the regular house organ form and carried nothing on the front and back pages but the institutional insignia of the Publix organization. As you will note, the two inner pages were devoted to playdates of the pictures during the week as well as carrying the ads of the local merchants. Sweeney promoted all of the ads and the advertising rates enabled him to make up this special program which almost every merchant in the neighborhood endeavored to secure space in, due to its "class."

French Troop Train Was Utilized As A Ballyhoo For Film

Knowing that the American Legion Post in Joliet, Ill., had built a reproduction of one of the French troop trains used on the Western Front during the War, M. E. Berman, manager of the Rialto Theatre, secured the co-operation of the American Legion and obtained the use of this train several days in advance of the engagement of "All Quiet on the Western Front."

The train consisted of a locomotive, tender and box car mounted on an automobile chassis and equipped so that it could be driven about the streets. It was paraded through the town, being driven by Legionnaires, and at night was equipped with red flares which created no end of attention. The parade was staged each day and during the hours the train was not being driven, it was parked in front of the theatre.

This ballyhoo, well known to the natives, was immediately recognized and they more than read the notice on the sides plugging the film. Being well versed in showmanship, Berman knew that this gag was one of the most effective he could use. Listen, "M. E.," when you send us in your next contribution how about including your photo and a little dope on yourself so that we can give the rest of the Club the low-down on you?

Albert B. Lourie Says:

Mammy Warblers In Fulton Stunt Wore Out Pants At Knees

A stranger entering Council Bluffs, Ia., on the night that R. K. Fulton, manager of the Broadway Theatre, ran the finals of one of his show merchandising stunts would have imagined that he was seeing double and hearing triple; all because "R. K." was staging an "Imitate Al Jolson Contest" in conjunction with his showing of the blackface star's latest vehicle, "Mammy."

Circus heralds were distributed well in advance; the heralds setting forth full information about the Jolson contest as well as announcing title of picture, theatre and playdates. And the first and second prizes that were donated by a local jeweler.

Contestants appeared on the stage of the theatre at 9 o'clock on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of the week previous to the showing of "Mammy." The winner of each of these nights then appeared in a final contest that was held on Sunday night, June 22, the opening night of "Mammy."

Judging was entirely by audience applause. And the prizes donated by the jeweler consisted of a man's $75 diamond ring and a $25 Bulova strap-watch, which were on display in the jeweler's window together with stills from the picture, and window cards carrying copy about the picture and contest.

Fulton's stunt not only created publicity for the film, but aided business on the week before, during which he ran the semi-finals. And the house was jammed on the night of the final, with "R. K." once more garnering good-will for the house.

Worden Turns Out Good Gags To Sell Shows At Cortland

An easy way of securing a good deal of publicity came to light in the stunt that A. E. Worden, manager of the Cortland and Temple Theatres in Cortland, N. Y., used to plug his showing of the recent fight pictures of Sharkey & Schmeling.

In the photo you will note that he constructed a special banner stand and placed it on the top of a car to plug the film.

TRY ADDISON'S TRICK

Here's a suggestion, successfully engineered by H. M. Addison of the Loew-Penn Theatre in Pittsburgh, Pa.

He has arranged for the Pittsburgh Fire Chief to drill his ushers twice a week. And in the near future he is going to augment his tie-up by taking movies of the staff on a fire truck at city hall.

Result: Fire chief tickled. Good copy for the newspapers and theatre getting some great breaks.

WOW!

We've struck gold for you . . . !

STAGE WEDDINGS

A complete resume of this marvelous b. o. angle, plus the details of several stage wedding campaigns recently executed, with unusual success, by your brother members.

NEXT WEEK

The car was driven about the main streets of the town and parked at the business sections for as long as time would permit. The banner was made up in attractive colors and was bound to be seen by every one with a block distance. This same stunt was repeated on "Journey's End" with the exception that in place of a banner, a cut-out was attractively displayed.

The other photo shows the net he uses to keep the town informed of his pictures. The net measures 15 by 18 feet and carries colored panels which make it visible for quite some distance. The cost of it is very small and the subsequent box-office boost because of the use of this medium makes the expenditure negligible.

We are glad to pass along these few accounts of the work Worden is turning out up in Cortland and we know that he will be represented in the future by more stunts of this type.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

ENTER ERNEST EMERLING!

He's no stranger to the Club as he has been a member for quite some time; but in view of the fact that he has been so busy getting set at the home office of Loew's Incorporated with Oscar Doob, director of publicity and exploitation for the circuit houses, we want to re-introduce Ernest Emerling.

Emerling is the editor of "The Loew-Down" circuit organ which is distributed to the various theatres. The paper, made up in tabloid form, contains many helpful hints to the managers and publicity men on the circuit, as well as giving accounts of stunts successfully executed. Many of his friends will remember Emerling as the city manager of the Loew houses in Memphis, Tenn.; and they will doubtless recall the mighty fine showmanship he displayed down there.

It is not often that a showman can step out of a job in the field, enter a home office, and fill a position as capably as Emerling is doing. We want to wish him lots of luck on his present position and we have every reason to believe that he will more than turn out work capable of meriting credit in any part of the showman world. Let's have a few of your views on the subject, Ernest!

Ed. Crane Cashed In On Newspaper Space With Plane Building

One thing that Ed Crane specializes in at the Florida Theatre in Daytona, Fla., is the various tie-ups that he makes on every picture that plays his house.

A tie-up with one of the newspapers resulted in the newspaper sponsoring a model aeroplane contest. So many youngsters sent in models that when put on display in the lobby, they extended from one end to the other.

The aeroplane models were judged by aeroplane experts from the local airport on the last day of showing of picture. This was purposely arranged in order that the exhibit might be seen throughout run of picture. First prize entitled the contestant to an award; theatre tickets for second prize and the book, "Dawn Patrol," for third prize.

Banners with title of pictures in large letters were placed on the bottom side of wings on local commercial aeroplanes making daily flights over city. These banners were on planes for three days in advance and during run of picture. This proved valuable advertising for the picture and was executed at no cost to the theatre.

Another tie-up was arranged with the city buses whereby they placed 10-foot banners on either side of all buses. These banners were on the buses throughout run of picture—and at no cost to the theatre.

There were several visiting troops of Boy Scouts in the city and together with the local Scouts—paraded in a body from down town over to the Florida Theatre at noon time Monday the second day of showing—the boys carrying banners reading, "We are on our way to see THE DAWN PATROL now showing at the Florida Theatre."

These various angles more than sold the picture for Crane, and as soon as he saw them lining up at the box-office he set to work on laying out his campaign for the next picture, believing that a "He who waits till tomorrow is lost, particularly so if he is buying on margin."

Harry Billings Is Showing Activity At Garrick In Mid-West

A street ballyhoo out of the ordinary for his town was used by Harry Billings, manager of the Garrick Theatre in Virginia, Minn., to plug his showing of "Our Blushing Brides."

The ballyhoo consisted of a sedan with back of car carrying copy, "Just Married? No! Just Blushing! On our way to see Joan Crawford in OUR BLUSHING BRIDES—Garrick—Friday and Saturday."

Tin cans and old shoes were tied to the rear of the car and pennants and plumes were used in decorating the front.

There was no expense to this ballyhood other than cards as Billings used his own car, had his son act as chauffeur and friends of his son occupied the back seat dressed as bride and groom.

The car was on the streets both days of run of picture which in turn proved an excellent medium in advertising the picture.

Though he is located in a small town, it is certain that Billings' showmanship is not small time.

Department Stores In Toledo Helped Caldwell Sell Show

An interesting tie-up that proved a profitable one was used by Walter Caldwell, manager of the Valentine Theatre in Toledo, Ohio, to sell his showing of "The Floradora Girl."

Caldwell arranged with a local department store, the largest in Toledo, for a window display and the use of three of their employees as models demonstrating the new style bathing suits in the window. A special background for the display was arranged by artists, and in addition to window cards announcing the coming of the production, a number of old-fashioned bathing suits from the production were shown.

A contest was staged with the Toledo News-Bee, in connection with the display. In this contest, prizes were offered for the three quaintest and oldest bathing outfits. The prizes offered were three Catalina Swim suits from J. E. Watts & Company of Chicago. To the next 12, the theatre awarded a pair of tickets to see "The Floradora Girl."

Although the tie-up was made with a competing department store, another store also gave Caldwell an elaborate window display on the Catalina Swim Suits with appropriate cards calling attention to the engagement.

R. W. VAN HOOK Says:

"Have looked forward to your section each week and I think it's a great help to the managers of the country and I for one would not be without it. I have gotten quite a number of good tips from reading each and every page and all I can say is ON WITH THE GOOD WORK."

Fourmet Fashioned Flashy Front For "The Silent Enemy"

If you'll look at the copy that Al Fourmet, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Abilene, Texas, has painted on the special front he constructed for "The Silent Enemy" you'll notice the words "Amazingly Different." Well, those two words just about convey our comment on the front.

The mounted heads of the animals which adorn the front were promoted from various local hunters at no cost to the theatre. Al even went to the homes of prominent local nimrods and they obligingly consented to take their trophies off the walls and let him use them during the showing of the picture. Deer and boar heads were featured and if you'll look closely you'll also notice a stuffed wildcat in front of the box-office.

As a front of this type had never before been seen in Abilene, a great deal of interest was aroused with the subsequent word-of-mouth publicity portending a good break for the picture. This sort of work is typical of what Al does to bring them into his house, and we have half an idea, since his brother Phil is the new manager of the Paramount in Youngstown, Ohio, for Publix, having been transferred from the Colorado Theatre in Pueblo, Colo., he is going to give him a race to see who can score highest in showmanship. There's a tip for you, Phil. How about giving us a line on your stuff so that the rest of the Club can see what the Fourmet family is turning in showmanship. Thanks, Al, for shooting along this contribution and firing the opening volley. We're all set for the return.

Juvenile Booster Club Was Kid Biz. Feature Amos Used

When Charles Amos, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., wanted to boost attendance of children at the Imperial, he decided to organize the Imperial Juvenile Booster Club.

To make it worth while for the children of Asheville to join the club, Amos provided the new members with a membership card, at the bottom of which were ten small squares numbered from one to ten. The idea was to promote the juvenile members into attending the shows at the Imperial more often in the hope of winning a free admission after the ten squares had been punched, registering that the child had paid ten admissions to the Imperial, as the kids were admitted free on the eleventh visit.

Thousands of these cards were taken up by the youngsters of Asheville and, needless to say, the number of children going to the Imperial increased to a great extent.

One of the conditions for membership stated on the card was that the holder would conduct himself or herself in a decorous manner while attending shows in the Imperial and failure to do so would result in forfeiture of the membership.

And is he busy along other lines? Just read what he did when he enlisted the aid of a department store to stage a fashion show.

The fashion show was a combination of lobby and stage exhibition. Living models were spotted throughout the foyer; the models standing on small stands and were lighted by concealed spots.

A runway was built over the orchestra pit with steps leading to the aisles.

In as much as his theatre has no stage, Amos was able to make the show very effective by having the models enter the pit runway from an exit walk across, then down the steps and up the aisles. Several models were in view at all times so that the performance was not slowed down at any time. The non-sync was used for music.

The department store, co-operating also, devoted three of their show windows to the display of fashionable clothes as well as cards containing copy about the fashion show, picture, theatre and playdates. The store also ran large ads of a co-operative nature playing up the fashion show.

Right after the fashion show he and his assistant Mr. Grubb put over a fair week that proved a highly successful event.

Amos first sold the newspaper on the idea of a Newspaper-Theatre Fair in the lobby of the theatre. The newspaper was to sell the merchants on taking space—having a booth in the lobby and giving away prizes. The theatre was to build the booths and run a list of the merchants who co-operated, on the screen. The Junior League was roped in to give the event "class."

Mr. Grubb not only carried out all details of the affair, but took it upon himself to sell each merchant that the newspapers sold on the idea of giving away prizes twice daily with a grand prize on Saturday.

Each one of the 18 merchants participating in the fair took space in the special newspaper section which came out on Sunday before Monday opening of fair. The participating firms endeavored to outdo the others in making their exhibit one which would cause patrons to linger.

Hours of the indoor fair were from 3 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon and from 7 to 9 o'clock in the evening. Although the fair was a gala event in itself, it did not in any way interfere with the excellent screen entertainment offered patrons of the theatre.

Each booth in the lobby was in charge of a Junior League girl who presented the patrons with tickets that accorded them a chance on prizes that the merchants gave away. These Junior League girls also served the patrons with eats, drinks, smokes, etc., consisting of an assortment of ice cream, cake, sandwiches, coffee, cigarettes—all of which was gratis to the theatre patron.

The fair was a success from all standpoints. So much so that all of the merchants and the newspaper want to do the same thing twice each year.

And that's what Charles H. Amos does to keep them coming into the Imperial. Does he know his stuff?

"TIP US OFF"

There is no finer news than an announcement of advancement for any showman in this business and when such an event takes place you should, by all means, drop us a note so we can carry the news on these pages.

Remember, not only the members and readers of these pages want to know about it, but your personal friends and acquaintances in different parts of the country will be equally as delighted to hear such good news.

Personal publicity of this sort is far from "blowing your horn." It is just as consistent from the publicity angle as a news announcement from the heads of a national theatre chain or distributing organization. They use just such means of letting the industry know what is happening in their outfits, so you, too, should avail yourself of this method of passing along good news of your own doings.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Oscar Even Tacks Up Announcement On Roof Of Theatre

We don't know whether Earle Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Athens, Alabama, stays awake all night to execute his campaigns, but he must certainly do a lot of "early birding."

We are showing a group of photos which will give you some idea of the stunts that he engineered recently. We had a special photo that showed a tie-up he obtained through the co-operation of a local dealer, in which he placed cut-out letters plugging "The Hollywood Revue" in front of the store, together with a machine plugging the theme songs, but unfortunately, this photo did not "take" well and we could not have another cut made in time for this edition. However, we'd like you to know that the letters were visible from some distance away and proved an excellent medium for attracting attention.

When Oscar played "Say It With Songs," he used a novel teaser idea in the form of a catch-line, "He's Here Mon. Tues." made of cut-out letters, which he placed on the roof of the Ritz. The idea caught on immediately and the evident interest of the natives could be easily seen, especially since they all stopped to ask Oscar what it meant. He pulled another gag in conjunction with his campaign on "Say It With Songs" that had them sitting up and taking notice, by printing a lot of placards with copy: "Good Morning! Al's At The Ritz Theatre, etc." These placards were placed in the front yards of every one in Athens, with a stick being used to fasten them in the ground. When the natives arose in the morning and opened the front door to get the milk or go to business, they were greeted by the Ritz attraction.

The other photo in our lay-out shows the way he plugged various attractions and also you will note that he has quite an original ballyhoo for his Westerns in the form of a wooden horse placed upon a truck which is driven about the town.

Perlberg's Popularity Is Deserved!

(To the tune of "Till We Meet Again")

"Smile the while we bid you sad adieu,
As the days roll by we'll think of you;
Perlberg—you were full of fun,
We can't forget the things you've done.
Jacksonville will miss your friendly smile,
The Ad club says, 'You've got 'em beat a mile';
So we all bid you good luck, old pal,
'Till we meet again."

And that's what Jacksonville, Fla., thinks of Jonas Perlberg, former publicity director of the Florida Theatre in Jacksonville, Fla.! The above song, written by David Klein, sales manager of a local store, was a musical tribute paid to Perlberg at a farewell party tendered him by local merchants when he announced his transfer to the New York office from which he will be detailed to a Publix house in another section of the country.

Half of the well known team of Weiss-Perlberg, Inc., the showmen whose exploits have been often recorded on our pages, Perlberg's mode of working made him many friends in his eighteen months stay in Jacksonville, the contacts affording him opportunities rare in a publicity man's show selling. We are sure that wherever he is stationed he will more than make good; and we know he is going to continue the showmanship that has characterized his every effort since he has been in the show game. Good luck, Jonas.

Harris Enhances Effectiveness Of Trailers At House

Another showman who believes in enhancing his trailer presentation by the use of novel effects is Marvin Harris, manager of the Majestic Theatre in East St. Louis, Ill.

When he played "Shadow of the Law," just before the trailer was to go on, all of the house lights were switched off. A siren and a bell were sounded, red slides were flashed on the screen, and a voice through the horns said: "I'm very sorry to interrupt this performance but a very dangerous criminal serving a life sentence for murder has escaped and is in the vicinity. He is evading the shadow of the law. Here are pictures of him."

At the conclusion of the announcement the trailer for "Shadow of the Law" was shot on to the screen. The stunt was a wow. Persons leaving the theatre were talking about it all the way out to the street, and even the next day, with the word-of-mouth comment helping plug the film considerably.

We understand that Mr. Harris often turns out novel presentations and if that be the case, we'd like to hear some more from him concerning them. And you might also include your photo and a note about yourself, Marvin.

THREE THOUSAND WORLD'S BEST SHOWMEN CAN'T BE WRONG!

MEET THESE NEW MEMBERS!

JAMES J. MOORE manages the Eckel Theatre in Syracuse, N. Y. We have heard some very favorable reports regarding Mr. Moore's work and it is our opinion that when a showman can be so well spoken of, he must have the goods. We'd like to have a photo and a little more dope on this showman so that we can give him a regular introduction on our pages. You can remedy the deficit, "J. J." What do you say?

ROBERT ELLIOTT is the Assistant Manager of the Maryland Theatre in Hagerstown, Maryland. Mr. Elliott is working at a house where showmanship has long been one of the foremost factors, as the showman who used to manage the house before he received his promotion turned out some work that will be hard to beat. But we have an idea that if Mr. Elliott pays close attention he is going to pick up a lot of tips that will help him in his show career.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM T. POWELL manages the Strand Theatre in Portland, Maine. Mr. Powell is the latest of the showmen from this state to enroll and we really do not have to say that he is right there with the goods as far as showmanship goes, because his work has already said as much and we have a hunch that his future work will say more. Are we right, Bill?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. M. DOWLING is the manager of the Broadway Theatre in Newburgh, N. Y. The city where Mr. Dowling is located affords him opportunity to display some of the showman ability which he possesses and he more than takes advantage of it. We hope that you will take the same advantage that the Club pages offer you, Mr. Dowling, for what better medium have you in which to display your finished product, that can help your fellow showmen?

RUDOLPH A. KUEHN really needs no introduction on these pages, as this popular General Manager of the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises in New York City has shown us that despite the fact he carries a big job on his hands, he can pitch in and sell shows with any manager on his circuit. Rudy is well known as a go-getter, and he is liked by all of his men. When this can be said about a showman, he has the goods, and no question about it. Welcome, Rudy.

BEN GREENBERG manages the Paramount Theatre in Springfield, Ill. From what we recollect, it seems to us that Greenberg's house has been under discussion many times regarding the excellent showmanship turned out there. Photos of Members!

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once. Thank you.

E. A. ADJEI is the manager of the W. E. K. Palladium Theatre in Accra, Gold Coast, West Africa. We want to welcome this showman to our fast growing ranks of foreign members and we are sure that his association with the Club is going to be a pleasant and a profitable one. We would like a picture of you, Mr. Adjei and a little story when you send in your next contribution.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. G. LE KANDER manages the Fargo Theatre in Geneva, Illinois. As his house is an independent one, Mr. Le Kander manages to turn out some work that goes over very well in his town, particularly since he is well acquainted with most everybody, and the merchants especially. He is doing some good work out there and we hope he will pass some of it along to us.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. M. McDANIEL manages the Rialto Theatre in Sinton, Texas. He has been in the show game for a number of years and we understand that his showmanship forms a most important part of the town's activities. Listen, "E. M.," we number a great many live-wires from your state. How about our representing you as one, too? You know all that you have to do is to be an active member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEN BURGE is the manager of the Empress Theatre in Calgary, Alberta, Can. Mr. Burge is the latest of the Canadian showmen to hop onto the band wagon and join the Club. His work in Calgary has won him recognition as a wide-awake showman, and we feel sure that he is going to be just as active as the rest of his fellow showmen in the dominion. Are we right, Len?

"JUDGE" SAEF is not a jurist or magistrate but the house manager of the Uptown Theatre in Boston, Mass. The "Judge" is no slouch when it comes to landing free space in the newspapers, in fact, that is one of his best accomplishments. We will tell you more about him in future issues and we hope he will forward a photo to us and a little more dope on himself so that we can give him a regular introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN D. REDMOND manages the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, Mass. Located in a town where showmanship abounds, it appears to us that Redmond must be doing some tall stepping to keep right in line with his fellow showmen. Why not sit down and send the dope in to us, John, on how you keep your box office singing a "cash and carry" tune all the time.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE N. PAYETTE is the manager of the Tivoli and the Opera House in Frederick, Maryland. He comes proposed for membership in the Club by Frank Boucher, whom you all know as one of the Warner District managers and a real showman. Well, Mr. Payette, when Frank recommends you that is enough for the present, but we'd like you to know that we want to hear what you are going to do in the future. Keep us posted, will you, so that we can get the low-down on things theatrical in your region?

CHARLES FARRELL

Success after success. Among them such monumental attractions as "7th Heaven", "Sunny Side Up" and "High Society Blues". Admittedly the most popular male star of today as attested by popular vote of readers of Chicago Tribune and New York Daily News. His strongest role—"Liliom" the roughneck, barker for a merry-go-round, idol of the women, selfish, arrogant, lazy, conceited, yet a great lover.

ROSE HOBART

Does magnificent work as "Julie", the serving maid. One look at "Liliom" and she is his forever. At first it is she who does the wooing. For him she leaves job and comforts, gladly.

H. B. WARNER

LEE TRACY

"The Buzzard". Stick-up man, would-be murderer. Lures "Liliom" with tales of riches easily gained.

FRANK BORZAGE
Only director twice to win the Photoplay Medal for season's greatest picture.

FOX is proud (any studio would be) to produce so distinctive a drama as this by FRANZ MOLNAR
